Christmas Books

You can express a great deal of Christmas in the right book. A book that you yourself like, and which you know your friend will like, expresses care and thoughtfulness, and is within the reach of all persons. Here are four of our new books, all different, but all good:

MY FRIEND THE CHAUFFEUR by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. Cloth, 12mo, Illustrated. $1.50

All whose souls have responded to the heart throbs of a motor, all who have had experience in or hope to enjoy foreign travel, picturesque scenery, quaint towns and ancient castles, all who love a love story well told, will enjoy "My Friend the Chauffeur." He is a titled Englishman, disguised as a chauffeur, who conducts an American girl and her party through Northern Italy, Venice and Dalmatia.

THE PANG YANGER by Elma A. Travis, M.D. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

Abijah Bead, the Pang Yanger, punishes his faithless wife by bringing her son to grow up in the community where she is best known, that his startling resemblance may be a punishment to her. His purpose is overwhelmed and set aside by the irresistible impulse of his love for a Southern girl, which sweeps over his nature like the forest fire which wipes Pang Yang out of existence. The Pang Yanger's comments on things add a grim humor to the book.

THE FORTUNES OF THE LANDRAYS by Vaughan Kester. Illustrated by The Kinneys. Cloth. $1.50

This is a story of the great West. It begins with the gold fever of '49, and describes emigrant trains, prairie schooners, Indian massacres and other stirring scenes, all held together by the family life of the Landrays, and the work, play, adventures and loves of the people composing this family. It is the story of the lives of our own immediate ancestors and an account of the making of the United States.

BACK HOME by Eugene Wood. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

We all look back to boyhood when we went barefoot, spoke pieces Friday afternoon, went in swimming without permission, attended Sunday-school because we had to, and the Sunday-school pienic because we wanted to. Therefore, we all find in this quaint, homely book our early boyhood life told as we always remembered it. It has the one touch of nature that makes us all akin.

for the Bookshelf

A good book carefully chosen, with a thought of the taste of the friend who will receive it, can express more real Christmas than a costly jewel or an expensive trifle. Good books are living things that add something to the recipient's life.

THE WORK OF OUR HANDS by H. A. Mitchell Keays. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

Here is a girl brought up in straitened circumstances who becomes the wife of a millionaire whose money has been made by the work of hundreds of hands. The wife, at first astonished and dismayed at the conditions she finds, tries to relieve their sufferings with her husband's money. This brings opposition and division, and out of this is worked up a strong story and one founded on industrial conditions as they prevail in this country.

THE ANCIENT LAND-MARK by Elizabeth Cherry Waltz. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

Imagine a young, beautiful and sensitive woman irrevocably married to a drug fiend. She believes that nothing can justify divorce, and her friends and the social circle to which she belongs agree with her. The entire book is occupied in telling how she gradually came to believe in her right to her own life, in which she was helped by a real love for a man whom she could also respect. The background of the story is laid in Kentucky, and it is a beautiful picture of the famous blue-grass country, so replete with the picturesque and romantic.

TOLD BY UNCLE REMUS by Joel Chandler Harris, with 61 illustrations by A. B. Frost and others. Large 12mo. $2.00

President Roosevelt said of these stories and their writer in a recent speech in Georgia:

"I am very fond of Uncle Remus. Presidents may come and Presidents may go, but Uncle Remus stays put. Georgia has done a great many things for the Union, but she has never done more than when she gave Mr. Joel Chandler Harris to American Literature."

I. N. R. I.: A Prisoner's Story of the Cross—by Peter Rosegger. 8 illustrations, in color, drawn by C. K. Linson. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

A carpenter in prison, under sentence of death, seeks consolation in writing what seems to him the real story of Jesus Christ. His account of the events of the Saviour's life, as he remembers them, is homely and colloquial, but with a wonderful earnestness, sincerity and beauty. Taking an original point of view, the author approaches the subject with all reverence, and makes it an uplifting and inspiring story.

Christmas Books

A Christmas book need not be a story. If you have a friend who plays bridge or golf, here is a chance to choose a book that he will appreciate more than any story—a book that he will gladly add to the choicest shelf in his library.

FOSTER'S COMPLETE
BRIDGE by R. F. Foster.
Cloth, 12mo. Net, $1.50; postpaid, $1.62

This is a complete manual on Bridge Whist by America's leading Bridge expert. It will serve as an introduction to the game for the beginner, but it also treats extendedly of the finer points of play for the more experienced. The author makes his directions for the proper leads very clear by a new and ingenious arrangement of diagrams, through which the playing of sample hands is indicated.

THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER AND OTHER CARTOONS by John T. McCutcheon. Net, $1.50; postpaid, $1.70

John T. McCutcheon, the funniest cartoonist in the world, who is paid twenty thousand dollars a year to draw cartoons in the Chicago "Tribune," presents 160 of his best comments on current events. Even the victims of Mr. McCutcheon's ready pencil appreciate the joke. He knows how to be amusing without hurting. Not since the days of DuMaurier has a cartoonist been able to tell so long a story in one picture.

THE COMPLETE GOLFER by Harry Vardon. 50 illustrations. Net, $3.50; postpaid, $3.65

Harry Vardon is, unquestionably, the greatest golf player that the world has ever seen, and has more knowledge of the art, science and technique of the game than any man alive. He shows in this book that he has also a rare faculty for imparting this knowledge. It offers even the most experienced golfer a host of helpful hints, the fruit of Mr. Vardon's own varied and long experience. The illustrations alone are a most complete commentary on the game.

THE WIVES OF HENRY VIII by Martin Hume, with portraits. Net, $4.00; postpaid, $4.20

Unusual opportunities to get at little known documents, and a great deal of diligent research coupled with a brilliant historical faculty, have enabled Major Hume in this book to produce a volume of rare interest. Heretofore little has been known concerning the lives of the unfortunate consorts of Henry VIII, and these poor ladies have been viewed only in their relations to King Henry. From pathetic Catharine of Aragon to strong-willed Katharine Parr, they offer a very wide romantic interest in themselves.

for the Bookshelf

Here are four books that have been so highly appreciated by the public that thousands of readers will enjoy them better than any new book just published. A unique study of Parisian life, a story of the great silent places of the forest, a story of the child-life on the east-side, and finally the school-life of a little girl growing up in the average small American town.

THE BEAUTIFUL LADY by Booth Tarkington. Illustrated in color. $1.25

The story opens where the hero, and narrator, is sitting in front of a café with shaved head, upon which is painted an advertisement of the least amusing ballet in Paris. The Beautiful Lady was touched and sympathetic where others found only amusement, and from then on the story never flags and the author never loses his marvelous mastery of the quaint dialect in which the story is written. It is wonderful the way he gives American slang in broken French.

EMMY LOU: HER BOOK AND HEART by George Madden Martin. 50 illustrations. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

This delightful and wonderfully human story tells how a little girl, beginning in the First Reader, goes from class to class through the public schools, and describes the various little tragedies and comedies of a school-girl's life. The author writes from her memory of her own girlhood so vividly that there are few people who grew up under the same conditions who will not recognize the book's appeal.

THE BLAZED TRAIL by Stewart Edward White. Illustrated by Thomas Fogarty. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50

Who is there, who has listened beside the camp fire to the broken English of an Indian guide, who does not know and love Stewart Edward White? If there be such a one, let him take "The Blazed Trail" as a beginning, and read this powerful story of the great Northwestern timberland. It is a classic of the forest, written by one who has lain by night, under the near-by stars, listening to the many voices of the forest.

Myra Kelly. Cloth, 12mo. 17 illustrations. $1.50

The author has discovered a new language—that spoken by the little American-born children of the Russian Jews, who use the English words with the strange constructions of their fathers and mothers. One of the most touching parts of the book is the devotion of these children to their teacher, and the real love of the teacher for her charges. This author has discovered an absolutely new field, one in which the short story has never before penetrated.

The Deluge

"A cross-section out of the very heart of our life today, with its big and bold energies and passions, the swiftest and intensest life ever lived by the human race."

"THE DELUGE" is a story of high and frenzied finance. It is important to every fiction-lover because it grips the attention in a vise of steel. It is important to every patriotic American because it lays absolutely bare the financial dilemma toward which the country has drifted.

But in the clash of the great business conflict, the love element is not for a moment forgotten. It is the refreshing and glorifying touch in a novel of magnificent proportions and persistent absorption.

A GARDEN IN PINK

AN IDYL BY BLANCHE ELIZABETH WADE With decorations and illustrations is, color by Lucy Fitch Perkins

"IT may have been suggested by the pale flush of a rosy sunrise, or by the tender glow of a dying day; by the sudden remembrance of a fragrant breath of last Summer's pinks, or by a mere glance at my Spring gown; yet I think the arbutus was the real cause of the inspiration.

"However that may be, as we wandered under the leafless trees, I exclaimed to The Other One,—

"'O Other One, this year it shall be pink!""

And this is how they decided that the garden should be pink; and they were so exacting that they even changed the homely name of John Brown, the gardener, to Giovanni Pincolini, so that he should be in complete harmony with his surroundings.

The appearance of this whimsical idyl of married life and nature appreciation, with its pink and green scheme of cover, decorations, and illustrations, is of exquisite delicacy and originality.

JAMES M. LUDLOW'S NEW NOVEL

Illustrated Cloth, $1.50

SIR RAOUL

Author of "Deborah"
Etc.

A Story of the Theft of an Empire

The kind of a book one reads twice over. The story has such a go that one must read fast to keep pace with one's fascinated interest. But after the book is laid down and Raoul is safe home in his Schwarzwald castle with his Lady Renee, you begin to suspect that if you had not hurried so fast you would have learned a host of facts about life in the thirteenth century, and about the ways of our crusading forefathers. So you read it twice. The immense amount of accurate information makes one think of Reade, and the rapid action recalls the more modern Hope, but the welding of the two into faultless diction is Ludlow's own.

"Not long ago," according to The Book Monthly, "there walked into a London bookshop a gentleman who said: 'I should like the works of your best-selling author.' Then he went to the other end of his shop, picked out a complete edition of Shakespeare and brought it, with the remark, 'This, sir, is our best-selling author.' DUTTON'S TOLD TO THE CHILDREN SERIES

Each, with 8 colored illustrations, 50 cents

These little books are based on classics which grown-up people and older children know well, but which in their original form are too difficult for the little folks to understand.

The get up of the books is especially pleasing to the little ones. While charmingly done, their size and binding gives them more of the appearance of a grown-up's book than a child's book. The size is a square 16mo, 5x61/4 inches. The bindings are in cloth with gold decorations and a colored cover design similar to the illustrations. Each volume has eight or more full-page colored plates like the sample. A heavy antique type which is very easy to read is used on pure white rag paper.

The First Long Animal Story by the Author of "The Kindred of the Wild," etc., etc.

"The absorbing adventures of Red Fox are depicted with the rarest skill, in addition to which the book makes a brilliant chapter in Natural History."—WM. R. LESTER in Phila. No. American

"The reader gives himself up eagerly to the charm of Prof. Roberts's delightful style, and becomes wholly absorbed in the fascinating adventures of Red Fox."—F. DANA REED in Brooklyn Eagle.

Our own confidence in the fine quality of GRACE MacGOWAN COOKE'S striking novel on the Labor Question, THE GRAPPLE, cannot be better expressed than in the words of the New York Times critic, who said: "Mrs. Cooke's unusual story is so original, so strong, and so finely told, that it deserves a large and thoughtful public and a leading place among the books of the day.'

"Another altogether delightful Mrs. Jim book" is the consensus of the enthusiastic commendations of MRS. JIM AND MRS. JIMMIE, by STEPHEN CONRAD. The first "Mrs. Jim" book, The Second Mrs. Jim, doubled its sales during the fall of 1904, altho' it was published in the preceding April. "Mrs. Jim and Mrs. Jimmie" will do that and much more than that. If your customers haven't met Mrs. Jim or Mrs. Jimmie yet, they have a treat in store for them.

When ROBERT NEIL-SON STEPHENS wrote THE FLICHT OF GEORGIANA, we knew that it would have a large audience, but we could not anticipate the unanimous praise of leading critics. We quote two: "He is the master among modern writers of romance."-Phila, Press. "A well told, eventful and thoroughly satisfying story, the reading of which left us refreshed, cheered and grateful."- Everybody's Magazine.

The Bible Beantiful.

From the beginning of history, religion and art have gone hand in hand. The worshipper has always embodied his aspirations in some form of beauty. The Mosaic law forbade the Hebrews to practice graphic arts: "Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image nor the likeness of any thing that is in Heaven above, or on the earth beneath or in the water under the earth." Their spiritual ideals were of the loftiest and they wrought them into a great national literature from which all Christian art has drawn its first inspirations. When Christianity entered the western world its teachings were to be interpreted to a people that could only receive through the eyes and they were at once translated into the universal language of pictures. This great motive fashioned the marvellous mosaics, carved cathedral fronts, designed stained glass windows, ornamented bronze doors and frescoed the walls and ceilings of the great houses of worship. Century after century the sacred story of a world created out of nothing, lost by sin and redeemed by the sacrifice of the only begotten Son of the Creator, was translated from one form of art to another until the world's noblest painting was worthy to stand beside the world's noblest literature.

An opportunity is given to all to possess in most artistic shape a collection of the most celebrated paintings based on Bible subjects, and most valuable information upon the artists that painted them, in "The Bible Beautiful," by Estelle M. Hurll, which L. C. Page & Company make their leading holiday book this season.

In this volume she traces the development of Bible illustration from the crude pictures of the catacombs through the art of various countries to the present day. Three appendices, composed of selections from mediæval literature, throw light upon the study of art origins and there are three carefully made, most useful indexes: one of artists for the art student; one of places for the tourist; and one of Bible subjects for theological students. The book is illustrated in duogravure from photographs selected by the author from forty-three of the old masters.

The publishers have made a dainty holiday book of this very valuable material. It is bound in white parchiment, with rich gilt border ornamented in mosaic design, and makes a very ornamental as well as distinctly appropriate Christmas gift. It is neatly boxed. Miss Hurll is doing most excellent work in a specially happy manner.

HER LETTER.

The Love Snit on Poverty Flat.

In the summer of 1868 the second number of the new California magazine, The Overland Monthly, contained a story by its editor entitled "The Luck of Roaring Camp." The world almost missed that story. The young girl proofreader thought it immoral and the foreman of the printing office pleaded with the young editor to suppress it. But the publisher of the magazine decided that it should appear unchanged by one letter or comma, and Bret Harte, the young editor, became known throughout the reading world.

Very soon the magazines of highest rank were competing for such sketches of the outskirts of civilization which Bret Harte peopled with characters that became household words.

And then little poems and poems of longer length began to fill odd corners of the papers and magazines, signed B. or H., or not at all. These added to the author's growing fame and perhaps will keep this fame alive when his stories are neglected by a coming generation. Of such are the three poems that together tell the history of "the love-suit on Poverty Flat." Two of these appeared in the seventies, "Her Letter" and "His Letter," but it was nearly at the close of his life that the author wrote "Her Last Letter" which so touchingly rounds out the love-story so dramatically and artistically told. In "Her Letter" the "heiress to the best-paying lead in the state" writes from New York where she has been taken to be "'finished' by travel"

"To someone who breasted highwater,
And swam the North Fork and all that,
Just to dance with old Folinsbee's daughter,
The Lily of Poverty Flat."

"His Letter" is dictated in high fever to "Truthful James," that masterpiece of Bret Harte's creation, who himself adds:

P. S. Which this same interfering
Into other folks ways I despise;
Yet if it so be I was hearing
That its just empty pockets as lies Between you and Joseph, it follers
That, having no family claims,
Here's my pile, which it's six hundred dollars,
As is yours, with respects,
TRUTHFUL JAMES.

STARTING FOR CAMP.

Copyright, 1905, by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Outdoor Pastimes of an American hunter.

BIG GAME hunting is the subject dealt with in all but one of the chapters of this vital and absorbing volume, which is a fresh revelation of the "manysidedness" of the President of the United States. Mr. Roosevelt writes here as a born sportsman-ardent in the chase, evidently a dead shot, and "game" for any trial of strength or skill-yet he is more than that. Intensé love of nature, an almost emotional sympathy for the "various language" of wilderness, plain and forest, are evident, as is his thorough knowledge of the history and literature of hunting, his quick humor and his kindliness toward man and beast. His own attitude toward hunting is perhaps most clearly shown, when he says: "Personally I feel that the chase of any animal has in it two chief elements of attraction. The first is the chance given to be in the wilderness; to see the sights and hear the sounds of wild nature. The second is the demand made by the particular kind of chase upon the qualities of manliness and hardihood. As regards the first some kinds of game, of course, lead the hunter into particularly remote and wild localities; and the farther one gets into the wilderness, the greater is the attraction of its lonely freedom. Yet to camp out at all implies some measure of this delight. The keen, fresh air, the breath of the pine forests, the glassy stillness of the lake at sunset, the glory of sunrise among the mountains, the shimmer of the endless prairies, the ceaseless rustle of the cottonwood trees where the wagon is drawn up on the low bluff of the sunken river—all these appeal intensely to any man, no matter what may be the game he happens to be following."

Eight of the eleven chapters of the volume tell of Mr. Roosevelt's hunting experiences, recent or more remote. Among them are the hunt with the cougar hounds in Colorado in 1901, his bear hunt in Colorado and his wolf hunt in Oklahoma in the spring of the present year, and many of the incidents of his own ranch life. The prong-buck, mountain sheep, white tail deer, mule deer, and wapiti, each furnish a graphic chapter; as does his Yellowstone Park trip of 1903, when he laid the cornerstone of the great entrance arch to this magnificent national preserve.

"Books on big game," considered comprehensively and with keen critical acumen, have a place to themselves; while the final chapter, called "at home," tells of the family pets of his own household. The home pets have ranged from woodchucks, minks and dogs to a baby badger, kangaroo rats, flying squirrels, guinea pigs, rabbits, and "a queer-tempered young black bear, which the children named Jonathan Edwards, partly because of certain well-marked Calvinistic tendencies in his disposition, partly out of compliment to their mother whose ancestors included that Puritan divine."

On the preservation of our wild game Mr. Roosevelt holds strong views. Hunting with knowledge and discrimination, stringent "close seasons," and absolute prohibition of excessive game butchery—which he regards as "a repulsive debauch"—these he thinks are essentials, if outdoor life is to hold one of its manliest and finest activities. He makes a strong plea, also, for the hunter to be something more than a mere killer—an explorer, a naturalist. "If possible, he should be an adept with the camera; and hunting with the camera will tax his skill far more than hunting with the rifle, while the results in the long run will give much greater satisfaction." The spirit that underlies the whole volume, indeed, finds expression in the dedication to "Dear Oom John" Burroughs, as one whose writings "appeal to all who care for the life of the woods and the fields, whether their tastes keep them in the homely, pleasant farm country or lead them into the wilderness."

Many fine illustrations, most of them from

Salve Venetia.

LIKE Rome and Florence and other great Italian cities, Venice has always had an individual history and government of its own, as late even as the eighteenth century, when Napoleon ended the republic, and ceded the territories of Venice to Austria. tions been the Mecca of the art student and traveller. Its unique position and construction—rising vision-like from the unsubstantial sea—have only been part of the bewildering fascination it has exercised upon the world. The finest conceivable examples of architecture and sculpture are shown in its palaces, its tombs, and its churches; its art galleries, collections of masterpieces, rich in information and inspiration, draw lovers of the artistic from every quarter of the globe; to its lagoons and narrow streets, its home of a modern millionaire. Within its history is embraced the annals of the Inquisition—a name that will never cease to create a shudder of fear and abhorrence. The rise of the great republic, and its final downfall, is an episode so enlightening to the student of governments that none should fail to learn it by heart.

To tell the whole story of Venice has not been the object of F. Marion Crawford in his "Salve Venetia." He has done for Venice what he did for Rome in "Ave Roma Immortalis," and Naples in "The Rulers of the South"-given such salient points in its history as may be enjoyed by the general reader, ever craving fresh food for his hungry imagination; these events standing like milestones in Venice's growth and decadence. Thus prepared, the work is charmingly good reading, doubly enhanced by the novelty of Mr. Crawford's style, an attractive combination of simplicity and the half humorous philosophy of the man of the world. Volume one of this handsome work opens with an account of the republic of St. Mark; following are chapters on Venice under the families of Partecipazio, Candiano, and Orseolo; on Venice and the First Crusade; Venice and Constantinople; on manners and certain customs in the fourteenth century; with an account of the doges of the early part of the fourteenth century, the conspiracy of Marino Faliero and his successors, of Carlo Zeno, and of the two famous factions of the Castellani and the Niccolotté, between whom a bitter hatred existed. Venice in the sixteenth century begins the narrative of the second volume; its aristocratic magistrates, its criminal history, Venetian diplomacy, the arsenal, the glass works, and lace-makers, its painters, among whom were Titian, Tintoretto and Veronese; men of letters and scholars are a few of its themes. Venice is also pictured in her decadence, with pen sketches of her last homes, her last great ladies; the last carnivals, the last fairs, the last feasts, the last magistrates, the last sbirri, the last doges, the last soldiers, the last diplomats and the last hour.

The Macmillan Company, who publish this beautiful work, issue it with the certainty of enlarging the already almost numberless list of Mr. Crawford's admirers. Like their predecessors in the same line, the two volumes are richly illustrated. There are thirty photogravures and two hundred half-tones from drawings by Mr. Joseph Pennell, woven in the text, and an exquisitely designed binding. To those who enjoyed "Ave Roma Immortalis" this work is recommended.

associated with its history. In describing it Miss Whiting has confined her researches to a certain period in the life of the celebrated English poet and author of "Imaginary Conversations," the years from 1821 to 1864 when he lived at Fiesole, and was the dominant figure of the brilliant group of English and American authors and artists who made their homes in Florence.

The work is, in a way, a biography of one of the giants of English literature. It is not only based upon new Landor material, but it is a fresh attempt, and one of unusual power to portray for the world a true portrait of a man often unfairly treated. Strong impressionist views are offered of the man himself, from the pens of his contemporaries. His peculiar temperament, his impulsive loves and hates, his rapid methods of literary creation, with the story of his home life at the Villa Landor, his early romance, of which Rose Aylmer was the heroine, form subjects of chapters.

Landor's life lacked but a decade to rounding out a century. Some of the best work of his career was accomplished in the decades marking the closing years of his life, influenced no doubt by contact with the fascinating personalities that lent charm and distinction to the social life of the Florence of that period—a period studied by Lilian Whiting with unusual industry and enthusiasm, during a residence in this attractive old city. The narrative, however, is not limited to the nineteenth century; we are carried back to the past centuries of Florence, with its tragedies and their picturesque heroes. We visit her palaces, her monuments and tombs; listen to vivid descriptions and criticisms of the great art treasures of the Pitti and the Uffizi; and have told us in poetical phrase the legends, myths and authentic stories that cling to the figures of history and romance of her mediæval days, learning to love this "Flower of Dante and Michael Angelo, and the home of Galileo, and among the nearby hills of Fiesole, Boccaccio conceived his immortal "Decameron." Many of the "Imaginary Conversations" were composed here aloud, Landor wandering in the footsteps of the great Italian novelist. Florence always remained to him the most beautiful spot in the world and as it first impressed him under "the gleaming amethyst lights of the early spring days of 1821."

The first steps in the conception of George Eliot's "Romola" are followed through the crowded thoroughfares, the scenes of Savonarola's fiery and tragical conflicts being pointed out. Landor's villa looked down upon the birthplace of

The Villa Landor, of which we give a picture, has an added interest in the fact that years after Landor's death it was the home of Professor Daniel Willard Fiske, formerly of Cornell University, who restored its special features, fitting it up with every modern convenience, furnishing it with the most exquisite taste. The portrait of Mr. Landor, painted when he was eighty years of age and reproduced as the frontispiece of this volume, is the work of Charles Caryll Coleman, who was then a young art-student in Italy. It was painted for Kate Field. With its special literary charm, its many full-page pictures and handsome binding, the work ranks among the finest of the holiday volumes. invent the situations in which he can show his characters to the life.

All his old art and his constantly growing experience in literary construction are shown in Mr. Wilson's latest story, "The Boss of Little Arcady," just issued by Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co. The scene is laid in a thriving Ohio town, "just after the war," where the "boss" was not the low political schemer now known under that name in our large American cities, but the editor of the weekly zen, a member of the Slocum County bar, a veteran of our late Civil Conflict, shiftless, untidy, a borrower, a pompous braggart, a trouble-maker, forever driving some poor devil into senseless litigation, and also given to spells of hard drinking." But when even the "boss" was at a loss to proceed without withdrawing his "iron hand from the velvet glove," "Upright Potts" received word that his deserted wife was coming to Arcady and "Upright Potts" disappeared forever. wife came, a typical character of a generation ago, a devotee of "culture" given to lecturing and teaching and "literachoor." She influenced the "boss" by attacking him at his weakest point, his newspaper. She criticised and rewrote and taught until the rugged paper which had told the truth in any shape became a model of expression and she really first taught the Little Arcadians of the existence of Darwin, Huxley, Robert Browning, Emerson and the other civilizers of whom the world was talking.

The narrative is told by the intimate friend of the "boss," once his rival in the love of a woman who chose the "boss," and led to this second hero of the tale going to the war where he became a major.

A Southern lady of the old regime also comes to Little Arcady to be supported by her old ex-slave, and this gives Mr. Wilson opportunity for very noble thoughts about conditions following the Civil War. And this woman's daughter plays the part of the Cupid needed in all stories that are to be popular. These Southerners are in strong contrast to the energetic "boss" and to the woman who taught him so many active truths.

The publishers have made a pretty book, well printed, just the thing to read aloud in cosy comfort on a stormy winter night.

> written that they must be read, which hold before the people American ideals of true liberty, and of hard, constructive work that will help the next generation to acquire what no man can take from them.

The simpler and sweeter things of life hold sway in Little Arcady and the "boss" is always lovable.

LITTLE MISS AND "JIM."

Eve's Manghters.

"A house without a woman and firelight is like a body without soul or spirit."—Benjamin Franklin.

In our very tenderest years we were taught by some sweet, smiling, fluffy-haired Sunday-school teacher, adored by boys and girls alike, that all the sin and trouble of the world could be traced to Mother Eve. She had plucked a little apple from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil which she had been commanded to let alone, and she liked the first bite and of course kept the rest for the man she loved. He ate and then he told, and they both lost their Paradise.

Thus crudely was the beautiful idea of the responsibility of woman and of her power in the life of man presented to young minds by one of Eve's daughters, who herself could only read in the symbolical poem that Eve was very wicked and Adam very mean.

The little scholars grew to men and women, and saw and heard much of the happiness and the sorrow of the world, and were again taught the lesson of the tree of knowledge, this time by more sophisticated lips, which also reduced all the complicated story to one little proverb, and said: "Cherchez la femme."

What men and women both have said of "Eve's Daughters" bringing out of their study of woman and womanhood the very highest and the very lowest thoughts, is in itself a literature. A "Mere Man" has browsed recently in this special field and has compiled a book about "Eve's Daughters" in selections from writers of very clime and tongue, and these selections have been portrayed by the pencil of Arthur G. Learned, and Dana Estes & Company have secured all the nice work and have made it into a sumptuous holiday book. Open it anywhere, you are fascinated and can read for hours, and every page is full of pretty drawings, showing all the little articles of toilet, amusement, need or extravagance that are dear to the heart of woman from the cradle to the grave. Ribbons, laces, jewels, powderpuffs, fans, looking-glasses and cats zig-zag over the largest pages, entwined with flowers, hearts and little pictures of all kinds of impossible men, some with wings and some with cloven hoof, all hovering around "Eve's Daughters." The "Mere Man" that selected

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.

A Prisoner's Story of the Cross.

It takes courage once again to write the story of the Cross, but a German has this courage in the year of our Lord 1905. His name is Peter Rosegger, and he has found a translator in Elizabeth Lee, and a publisher in McClure, Phillips & Company.

The old, old story is told by a prisoner. Who was he, how came he to undertake so arduous, so presumptuous a task? He was Otto Ferleitner, found guilty by a majority of two-thirds of the jury and in the name of his Majesty the King condemned to die by hanging. What had he done? He had belonged to a Society for the Protection of the People Against Traitors, and he had been selected to fire the shot at the Chancellor, a man in high position. He never for a moment had doubted that the Society which had so fired his emotions would be able to save him from all the logical consequences of his lawless act. But he was condemned to die, and when he reached his solitary cell he was frightened. He fell to the brick floor and lay as one dead. Later he roused and sent for a priest, not that he felt the need of religious consolation, but he craved the nearness of a human being and only a priest was allowed to visit a murderer. The priest came, said the conventional words, went away and sent the prisoner some appropriate reading. The little leaflets and booklets left the prisoner wholly unmoved, but the words touched a chord of memory. He thought of his mother, and how she had taught him the old Bible stories, how real she had made it all, and how she had always in the hours that were often so dark found comfort and rest in her Bible. The prisoner thought he would begin and write down the story of the Redemption of the world as his mother had told it. The warden refused him a pen, for condemned criminals had taken their life with such "a bare bodkin,"

Then came the judge who had spoken the sentence. He said perhaps in three weeks or six weeks the prisoner might be pardoned. He granted him ink, pen and paper, and the prisoner had work, the great boon so cruelly denied to murderers in prison.

And he wrote the story of "I. N. R. I.," and finished it exactly six weeks after his condemnation. He had written it all day and dreamed of it all night. He had been in the stable at Bethlehem, he had wandered perceive that Mr. Howells has produced a series of London views having many resemblances both to a moving picture and a composite photograph.

Since Mr. Howells's first impressions of London in Civil War days, he has revisited it at varying intervals, not like the professional tourist bent on "doing" the sights in the shortest possible time, but like a traveller returning home after a long absence, sure of a kindly welcome and confident of renewing the sensation of oneness with its storied past.

One may be a loyal American and yet feel the sensation. One may also be an enthusiastic New Yorker and yet find nothing to quarrel with in Mr. Howells's contrasted glimpses of the two cities, their buildings, streets, crowds and atmosphere. As he aptly sums up the differences between them, "London was and is and shall be, and New York is and shall be, but has hardly yet been."

In the pages of his book we accompany him in his rambles about London, by day and night, afoot or on top of the "lordly omnibus," or ensconced in the "cheerfully intelligent cab." Arriving in the early spring of 1904, Mr. Howells is made to understand what a pity it is that English houses cannot be built reversible, so that the cold outside may replace the colder inside. He comments on the London spring housecleaning, and on the London season, upon which the peace of mind and bank accounts of London tradesmen depend. The English church may be disestablished, the House of Lords abolished, but the London Season must be inviolable.

Mr. Howells pleasantly philosophizes on matters of state and ceremony; points out the reasons which make English life essentially a family life; wonders when the king up Nelson relics; to Henley for a water fête, called by our English cousins a boat-race.

Thus we saunter with this most engaging of guides, enlivened by his humorous comments, seeing old sights with more discerning eyes, gaining an appreciation of all that makes because while they wish to see it they do not know how.

The first necessity for the proper seeing of a picture is to try to see it through the eyes of the artist who painted it. The world is a vast panorama, and from it the painter tree? So what he does is to represent the subject as he sees it, as it appears to his sympathy or interest; and if twelve artists painted the same landscape, the result would be twelve different pictures differing according to their separate ways of seeing it, which. of course, would be influenced by their individual experience and feeling. People as a rule look only through their own eyes, and like or dislike a picture according as it does or does not suit their particular fancy. These people will tell you: "Oh! I don't know anything about painting, but I know what I like," which is another way of saying: "If I don't like it right off, I don't care to be bothered to like it at all." Such an attitude of mind cuts one off from all growth and development.

But there are many more people hungry to be taught to know and understand pictures, and for these Charles Henry Caffin, the wellknown art critic, has made a book called "How to Study Pictures," which has been published in the best style of the Century Company. Mr. Caffin, who is a native of Kent, England, came to this country in 1892 to work in the decoration department of the World's Columbian Exposition. Since then he has been art critic on Harper's Weekly, on the Evening Post, and the New York Sun. He is a graduate of Oxford University and a man of pronounced scholarly as well as artistic learning. He has had long experience as teacher and lecturer, and he understands the great art of holding attention and making his matter interesting.

His plan for this work is original and of great possibility. He teaches by means of a series of comparisons of paintings and painters from Cimabue to Monet, with historical and biographical summaries and appreciations of the painters' motives and methods. In each chapter two artists are compared, sometimes of the same school, sometimes of different schools. The author bids you—

"Look here, upon this picture, and on this"not as a rule to discover which is the better, but to contrast the artists' motives and methods. In the course of the comparison Mr. Caffin gives the history of the times when necessary to the understanding of the artists, short biographies of each artist, an explanation of the influences which helped to shape him and his special point of view; and teaches the method of his technique as 11lustrated in the samples selected. He acquaints his readers with all the men who may be described as pivotal or representative in the evolution of painting, and they are not allowed to become absorbed in one man or one school to the exclusion of others. Technical terms are used to make the reader familiar with them, but there is a good glossary.

And the publishers have done their share to make the volume a treasury of celebrated works of art. They have reproduced portraits of the great artists and specimens of their most characteristic work in facing pictures that show at a glance what the author has so carefully trained his readers to

THE SLUM CAT.

Animal Heroes.

Courage and daring are the accepted qualities of heroism, and these man shares with his humbler "little brothers" of the air and the forest. "Animal Heroes" is Ernest Thompson Seton's happy title for his latest volume of animal lore-character sketches and brief life histories of creatures engaged in constant struggle against opposing forces of man or nature, and rising above their fellows by their indomitable spirit and undaunted energy. It is a varied company — a cat, a dog, a pigeon, a lynx, two wolves and a reindeer - showing again Mr. Seton's wide knowledge and deep sympathies with all the dwellers of the brute world which he has made his own. To the telling there is added the interpretation of the artist-author's clever pencil, in a fine series of full-page drawings and an abundance of delightful marginal sketches and thumbnail > decorations, while in the artistic fitness of printing, type and execution, the volume takes its place beside Messrs. Scribners' previous editions of Thompson Seton's books,

There are eight stories in the volume, each founded on an actual animal life-history, though more or less composite as to details, and ranging in their setting from the east side purlieus of New York to the trackless forests of Manitoba. "The Slum Cat" is the first of the tales. From a kittenhood of outcast poverty, Slum Kitty is thrust by a freak of fortune into the most favored realms of cathood. As the Royal Analoston, of mythical pedigree, magnificent in fur and marking, she has soft cushions, tender care and every luxury; but the desire for her native slum drives her back to the wild freedom and dangers of her familiar haunts, where alone she knows contentment. Very graphic is the brief chronicle of "Arnaux," the homing pigeon, and full of interest in its indication of the wonderful feats, in speed and distance, accomplished by these little winged messengers. The bull terrier Snap is the only other one of the "animal heroes" who may be counted among the friends of man; and his affections were limited to his master, whom he loved with a truculent affection. His story is short and tragic, but vital in its picture of the wolf hunt with the pack of hounds, led on to dear victory by "the crowning moral force of grit, that none can supply so well as a bull terrier."

For the other stories there is a wilder back-ground. "Badlands Billy," the fierce black wolf of the buttes and plains, has the longest chronicle. From the cub days with his foster mother to his dominance as the terror of ranchmen and cattle herders, his career is traced with all a naturalist's insight and a trained story-teller's ardor. Thompson Seton in a few graphic sentences can convey a better realization of animal characteristics than is given in many a zoölogical treatise. Take, for instance, this: "Mankind has difficulty in recognizing the power of nostrils. A gray wolf can glance over the morning wind as a man does over his newspaper, and get all the latest news. He can swing over the ground and have the minutest information of every living creature that has walked there within many hours. His nose even tells which way

Thompson Seton has woven incidents of his own boyhood in the Canadian backwoods; "The Winnipeg Wolf" tells of the strange friendship between a small boy and a great gray wolf; and "The Legend of the White Reindeer" is a wild poetic Norse folk-tale it ran, and in a word renders a statement of every animal that recently crossed his trail, whence it came and whither it went." With equal clearness the various traits of animal nature are set before the reader, and wolf, coyote, and their fellows are given individuality and are seen as kin to man in their suffering, their heroism and their contentment. "Little Warhorse" is the tale of a jack rabbit, whose fleetness and grit won a hard earned freedom from the fierce ordeal of greyhound coursing; in "The Boy and the Lynx"

In all the tales are evident that mingling of keen observation and sympathetic understanding that have made Thompson Seton's books beloved by an ever-growing public, and an immense influence in the development of modern nature study. They interpret for man the world of dumb creatures, and together with their appeal as stories of vivid adventure there goes the stronger appeal of human sympathy, to be responded to by every one that

THICK WAS THE FUR OF FOXES.

The Christy-Longfellow "Evangeline"

Or all the remarkable group of poets that for so many years made Boston the literary Mecca for pilgrims from our own land and from "Outre Mer," Longfellow was the most widely famous. Emerson touched deeper depths of thought; Whittier touched the problems of the nation's life more deeply; Holmes came personally more before the public, but, taking the English speaking world at large, it was Longfellow whose fame overshadowed all the others, because he appealed to humanity/at large, he was "understanded of the people." Burns, Beranger, Uhland and Walter Scott are also not among the greatest of the world's poets; but they cheered, taught, comforted and inspired the homes of the world, and their readers can never fail, for love, hope, trial and resignation will always live in store for every child that is born, and who has sung of these as have the poets of the people and the. home!

And where has Longfellow sung of love, hope, trial and resignation as he has in "Evangeline"? The story of the lovers of Acadia, with its word pictures in the stirring English hexameters of the rugged shores and stormy winters of Nova Scotia, rests upon a tradition first brought to Longfellow by Hawthorne who saw in it greater possibilities for rhythmic poetry than for prose romance. It was first given to the world in 1847. Among the wild scenery of Acadia, Evangeline lived her love and hope; her days of trial took her through the world in search of Gabriel; and her resignation at last brought the tragic climax in the poorhouse hospital of the steady Quaker City of Philadelphia.

And when art and artist, as well as poetry and poets, had found a home in "the wild land of Hiawatha," what single poem more often inspired pictures than the sorrows of "Evangeline"?

Howard Chandler Christy showed last year how deeply Longfellow could speak to his pencil in the work he did on "The Courtship of Miles Standish." With even truer sympathy with his author has he made the illustrations for "Evangeline" which the Bobbs-Merrill Company have heightened in beauty and effectiveness by the rich, deep colors in which they are printed in their leading holiday book, "The Christy-Longfellow Evangeline."

Christy spends his life in drawing lovers. He has been most successful in drawing the American girl of American fiction for the past ten years, and who has not fallen in love with one, some or all of the self-reliant, independent, intelligent, frank, practical, bright, vivacious, generous, witty, energetic, affectionate, ambitious, modest, versatile and flirtatious girls he has pictured for us in the many novels he has illustrated?

But his work last year showed that not only the up-to-date, always beautiful American girl inspires him. He gave us satisfactory pictures of "Priscilla, the Puritan Maiden," and he has done even better imaginative work in drawing "Gentle Evangeline among the mists of the Almighty Atlantic," whose wanderings, led by love and hope, brought her to meet other men and women of whom Christy also makes most telling portraits.

Author and artist are commended; but this "Christy-Longfellow Evangeline" owes much to its publishers, who have gotten it ready for the season when "recommenced the reign of land of Grand-Pré, but when in the busy life of to-day the same affection prompts to Christmas shopping and bookbuying. They have made a holiday-book that is striking in its typographic attractions. On every page are printed in tint the kine, the fruits, the corn and the pine cones that grew on the land of "the wealthiest farmer of Grand-Pré," also wheels of fortune and cornucopiæ of plenty. Over this is printed the text. The colored illustrations require three and four printings and have had expert printers to bring out their fine effects. The binding is of rich red with a design of a missal of devotion within a heart-shaped wreath of forget-me-nots.

THE HERMITAGE.

The True Andrew Jackson.

Of the half dozen great Americans whose names have added lustre to The True Biographies Series none made history so rapidly or so spectacularly as the hero of the latest issue -"The True Andrew Jackson," written by Cyrus Townsend Brady. The J. B. Lippincott Company send out this attractive volume in time to capture the holiday trade, but it is a work that should be included in every library, as should the other volumes of the series, as true and impartial histories of famous Americans, often the subject of misrepresentation and exaggeration. More lives and sketches are said to have been written of Andrew Jackson, than of Washington or Lincoln, and they are all as varied in their standpoint as they are many in numbers. Mr. Brady has been studying the career of our seventh President for many years, scarcely leaving a volume unopened, or a sketch unread, that could throw light upon his many-sided personality and the many contradictory estimates of it. That he has sifted carefully many human documents his thoughtful narrative testifies. It is a notable gathering together of evidence in the way of opinions and anecdotes traced back to authentic sources, offering conclusive proof of every point he desires to sustain.

Unlike many of Jackson's former biographers, Mr. Brady has no apologies to offer for him. He says: "I began the study of Jackson with no predisposition to admire him. He was not one of my early heroes—not politically or personally, that is. I have carefully examined his career and character from the point of view of friend and enemy, and I have become persuaded that he is one of the three great Presidents in our history, and that, although he stands below both of them, as a personality he is quite worthy of being mentioned in the same breath with George Washington and Abraham Lincoln."

This is the key-note of the work, the man's sincere and strong personality and ardent love of country, qualities in a period that boasted of such figures as those of Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Thomas H. Benton, John Quincy Adams, John C. Calhoun and Martin Van Buren, Jackson's superiors in education, in culture and in abilities of various kinds, that made him the idol of the plain people, who twice elected him President of the United States. "What I have done was for my country," is Jackson's own apology for his shortcomings and should stand as his epitaph.

That the virtues of Andrew Jackson exceeded his faults is the deduction Mr. Brady logically reaches in all of the eighteen chapters into which he has divided his book. Beginning with his family and early life, he represents him as lawyer, planter, storekeeper, sportsman and soldier; three chapters are devoted to his highly creditable services in the Mexican and Indian wars; his personal appearance, manners, and the stories of "Jacksonian vulgarity" are threshed out in another chapter; "his relations with his mother and wife," and his love of children speak well for the beauty and purity of his home life; "the affair of Mrs. Eaton" exploits gossip of long standing, that became a national affair, around the person of the wife of a cabinet minister; his pugnacity and patriotism, duels and quarrels, his nullification measure, his war on the Second Bank of the United States, all have the searchlight of truth turned upon them, the result being probably the first unbiased portraiture we have had of the brave hero of the battle of New Orleans, and of the man who defeated Henry Clay.

An extended chronology of Jackson's life, compiled by the author, is prefixed to the volume, which the reader will find of great value. An appendix embraces papers of historical importance mentioned in the text. The illustrations are as generously placed as in the biographies of William Penn, Henry Clay, Franklin, Lincoln, Jefferson and Washington, and drawn from equally authentic sources, many being rare portraits. Mr. Brady's vivid style makes this an exceptionally readable biography.

ANDREW JACKSON AT NEW ORLEANS.

"AND YOUR EXPERIENCE MAKES YOU SAD?" QUOTH ROSALIND.

The Shakespeare Story Book.

"TELL me a story," is one of the first demands of childhood. More powerfully than we can realize are a child's taste and character influenced by the reply to this teasing, pleading question. For the answer may give a background of familiarity with the treasures of imagination, literature, and history, or it may pile up merely a heap of false and crude impressions of the common round of life. There can be only a depth of pity for the children who have never listened wideeyed and enthralled to brave tales of romance and adventure, or caught the clear notes of the horns of Elfland blowing across enchanted ground; to whom such names as Camelot, Roland, Baldur the Beautiful, Haroun Al Raschid are meaningless. They have been deprived of their full share of the common literary heritage of the world. There is no later study of literature that can make up for the lack of this early association and familiarity. This is particularly true as regards a knowledge and love of Shakespeare. Mary Cowden Clarke has said that with no other books than the Bible and Shakespeare a poor girl may become a cultured gentlewoman and a poor boy a man of character and attainments; and it is unquestionable that childhood acquaintance with the characters, plots and beauties of Shakespeare's plays is one of the strongest factors in the later development of literary taste and personal character.

It was almost one hundred years agoin 1807-that Charles and Mary Lamb's volume of "Tales from Shakespeare Designed for Young Persons" was published, presenting in simple matter-of-fact narrative the plots of fourteen of the comedies and six of the tragedies. They have been beloved by successive generations of children, and will doubtless hold their own for generations to come, despite many omissions of important detail-as, for instance the casket scene in "Merchant of Venice"-and a somewhat bald descriptive manner. Now another endeavor has been made in this same field, in "The Shakespeare Story Book," written by Mary MacLeod, delightfully illustrated by Gordon Browne and published by A. S. Barnes & Co. as a charming holiday volume of pale blue, with Nick Bottom and his attendant sprites frolicking on the cover. Sidney Lee, the eminent Shakespearian scholar, has written an introduction, setting forth the value and justification of this endeavor to supply young people with a fuller and more accurate rendering of Shakespeare's plots than has been heretofore available. But the stories themselves are their best justification. Miss MacLeod has chosen sixteen: "The Tempest," "Two Gentlemen of Verona," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Midsummer Nights' Dream," "Merchant of Venice," "As You Like It," "Taming of the Shrew." "Twelfth Night," "Romeo and Juliet," "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "King Lear," "Othello," "Cymbeline," "The Winter's Tale," and "Comedy of Errors." In the telling of each the plot is set forth with clearness and precision, and mainly by means of vivacious dialogue directly from the text. The stories

teuches the very note of enchantment and romance, in a way to charm the childish soul, and each successive page allures in the same way. "Macbeth" opens with a few words of introduction, setting the historical period. But we plunge into the tale itself, with the first sentence—"It was a wild night on a desolate heath near Forres"—which imparts a delightful "creepiness" that few children could resist.

are broken practically into chapter divisions, giving greater vitality; the beautiful songs are there in full; and the result is remarkable in its mingling of textual accuracy, simplicity, and vivacity.

Aside from its value as an introduction to the great treasure house of English literature the volume has the abiding charm of good story-telling. Take the rendering of "The Tempest," which opens with the chapter heading "The Magician's Isle"—in its first sentence, "There was once a lonely island far away in the midst of a wide sea," it

Gordon Browne's many illustrations are in full sympathy with the text, and it is apparent that writer and artist have worked together in most effective harmony. "The Shakespeare Story Book" deserves to take its place among the treasures of childhood, appealing directly to children themselves; giving to mothers, fathers, and "big sisters" material from which to satisfy the clamor of their small audience for "another story;" and at the same time serving as a key to open and make dearer in later years the golden casket of Shakespeare's genius.

THE SPARROWS TWITTERED AND HOPPED ABOUT QUITE WITHOUT FEAR.

A Little Princess.

"Ir I am a princess in rags and tatters I can be a princess inside. It would be easy to be a princess if I am dressed in cloth of gold, but it is a great deal more of a triumph to be one all the time when no one knows it," thus little Sara Crewe lectured herself in her dark, cold garret when she was hungry, neglected and aching with longing for the handsome father who, some years before, had left her in a London boarding-school before he sailed for India.

You know the story, you mothers and fathers, you boys and girls, big and little, of this soldier's daughter, indulged, petted, showered with all that money could buy, who, when she was eleven years old, heard that her father was dead, that all his fortune was lost in diamond-mine investments, and that she herself, instead of being the favored "parlor-boarder," must teach the younger children, run errands and help the servants in order to be kept at all in Miss Minchin's boarding-school. But Sara's imagination turned all the hard circumstances of her life into a story—"You are a story—I am a story, Miss Minchin is a story;" and she and Emily, her doll, Melchisedec, the rat, forlorn Becky, the scullery-maid, and two of the boarding-school children lived in a magic world created by Sara's vivid fancy, where cold and loneliness and ill-treatment did not exist and where Sara herself reigned supreme as the Little Princess.

So long ago that the boys and girls of fifteen can not remember it, there appeared in the pages of St. Nicholas the first history of Sara Crewe. Presently the story was published in book form; and, then, some two or three years back, Mrs. Burnett adapted it for stage presentation as "A Little Princess." Month after month the play drew crowded houses, made up largely of children, following with breathless interest the misfortune and good fortune of this little garret princess.

How they cried over Sara's hard life! How they sympathized with her when she had only shabby dresses to wear, only scraps to eat, and no fire to warm her garret! How they pitied her for all the scoldings she received, and admired her quiet bravery! And then, when the wonderful presents began mysteriously to appear in her room, how they rejoiced! And how supremely satisfied all the children, and the "grown-ups," too, felt when the gentleman from India was introduced and turned her again into a veritable Little Princess.

During all these years the story has been growing because, as Mrs. Burnett explains, a great deal more had happened at Miss Minchin's than she first had time to find out. For instance, Mrs. Burnett has discovered at the school two little girls, named Ermengarde and Lottie, who did not come at all into the first story of "Sara Crewe." Melchischede and Becky, the scullery-maid, have also introduced themselves; so, really, there was nothing for Mrs. Burnett to do but write Sara Crewe's story all over again, letting all these new characters appear in the book as they did in Sara's room up near the chinney-pots.

Therefore the whole of the story of "A Little Princess," with all the things and people who had been left out put into it, and "pages and pages of things which had happened that had never been put even into the play," is now offered by the Charles Scribner's Sons to the young folks all over the land. Many of them have known and loved Sara Crewe in years past; but to the younger brothers and sisters she is, perhaps, a stranger, waiting to be presented this Christmastide.

They will find her as pictured by Ethel Franklin Betts, a big-eyed child with a tangle of dark hair and a pathetic little face full of love for the weak and unhappy. Many full-page illustrations, reproduced in softly blended colors, embellish the volume which is of proper story-book shape and size, enclosed in pretty covers, whereon is represented the Little Princess with her doll cuddled in her arms and the sparrows fluttering around her as they used to do in the attic days when she divided her bread crusts with them and envied them their freedom.

Other Holiday Bift-Books.

The preceding pages describe and illustrate in detail several of the most notable holiday books. The following is a more complete descriptive summary, covering the general field, and noting the new books and some of the standards of the several publishers, who are arranged in alphabetical order. To them we are indebted for the many illustrations which adorn these pages and suggest more fully the books of the year.

Henry Altemus Company always give their best strength to books for young people. This year, however, they have two books that appeal to people who have learned some lessons in the school of life. Both are by Minna Thomas Antrim. In "Sweethearts and Beaux" she has written what may be called a mocking comedy, realistic and ironical, which presents some facts about women and men in telling manner; and with "At the Sign of the Golden Calf" she offers an arraignment of modern society, in which she says some pretty hard things, laying bare some hidden motives and wording some unpalatable facts in rather caustic manner. But with it all Miss Antrim lets "mercy temper justice," and her books will please at sight in their pretty dresses of ooze calf.

AMERICAN BAPTIST PUBLICATION SOCIETY, Philadelphia, have two novels of decided interest, both beautified with unusually pretty pictures. "Phyllis Burton," by Mrs. S. R. Graham Clark, deals with the life of an average New England village, in which the doctor's home is the scene and "Phil," her sister and cousin are the chief actors. The book is wholesome and full of humor. "The Appointed Way," by "Hope Daring," a pseudonym for Anna Johnson, tells a tale of the Seventh Day Adventists, a sect who believe that Christ will again appear on earth and that only those will be saved that hold the peculiar tenet of the sect. A magnetic preacher of the doctrines gains a great ascendancy over the father of a happy little family, and the consequences change the lives of all. A pretty town of western New York is the scene. Of more serious nature is "Christianity in Modern Japan," by Ernest W. Clement, principal of the Duncan Baptist Academy, Tokio, Japan, who gives a bird's-eye view of the work of missionaries in Japan and a very useful outline of the books, pamphlets and magazines, where more exhaustive information may be obtained. The critical Nation has pronounced that "in literary proportion and breadth of view, and in keenness of insight, this book is a model." It specially praises its "cool, judicial temper."

"The Higher Criticism Cross-Examined," by Fred D. Storey, who for years has been connected with the Appellate Department of the Supreme Court of New York, gives a very thorough investigation of the various positions of the higher criticism and controverts them with clearness of statement and felicity of expression.

D. APPLETON & COMPANY have provided liberally for the holidays in almost every line of literature. A very interesting book they have is "The Second Empire," by Dr. Thomas W. Evans, edited by Dr. E. A. Crane, a work that tells of the escape of Empress Eugenie from Paris after Sedan, in which she was aided by the author who was an American dentist. This publication has been fully described already. American history has a valuable contribution in "The Journal of Benjamin Henry Latrobe," architect of our greatest public building, the capitol at Washington, the personal friend of the first President of the United States, a man of great intellectual attainments, a soldier, architect, civil engineer, philosopher, artist, humorist, poet and naturalist. He travelled in the United States from 1796 to 1820, and this volume is composed of his notes and sketches, copiously illustrated with reproductions of the original drawings of the author, one of which is an original sketch of Washington taken at Mount Vernon when he was visiting the great President. Albert J. Beveridge, U. S. Senator from Indiana, has written a book that should go into every household where there is a son and a mother, under the title "The Young Man and the World." In it the young senator, just thirty-six, tells his young countrymen how he was plowboy at 12, logger at 14, graduated from De Pauw College at 23, plainsman, law clerk, lawyer, poor and without a pull, and by sheer pluck and hard work was thought fit to hold the great office of U. S. Senator at 36, where his steady, conservative work is commanding the admiration and respect of his older colleagues. Fiction is a specially rich field to draw from in the Appleton provision. Robert W. Chambers has two masterpieces, one entitled "The Reckoning," the other "Iola," as totally different in character as can well be imagined. "The Reckoning" is the fourth of the series of novels concerning early American history and is as good, if not better, than the others; while "Iola" is joyous, delicious satire, delightfully illustrated with borders, head and tail pieces and thumb-nail sketches by Arthur E. Becker, and has also illustrations in color by J. C. Leyendecker and Karl Anderson, all of which catch the abounding indescribable charm of this story of an "utterly too, too" father of eight daughters, all named for butterflies, who joked in Greek and Latin and impressed themselves upon their age. a most happy travesty of the high culture of the hour and of Elbert Hubbard's theories of art. Lloyd Osbourne also appeals to happy spirits in "Baby Bullet" who is an "orphan automobile." What that means you must read the humorous love-story to discover, and you will have lots of fun while you are wandering with the dear old maid, the American heiress, the big American hero and the disgruntled French "chauffeur" along the beautiful English country roads. "The Giants," by Mrs. Tremont Older, is a big, strong, exciting and true story of the Oil Trust; "The Carlyles," by Mrs. Burton Harrison, is laid in Richmond during the early stormy Reconstruction days after the Civil War. "Purple and Fine Linen," by Emily Post, and "The Game and the Candle," by Frances Davidge, give a startling picture of Manhattan's "best society"; and "Outside the Law," by James Barnes, tells a fine, dramatic detective story. "The Russo-Japanese War" is the motive in "At the Emperor's Wish," by Oscar King Davis; and the Chinese-Japanese war that preceded, furnishes the background for "The Staircase of Surprise," by Frances A. Mathews. Miriam Michelson has followed "In the Bishop's Carriage" with "A Yellow Journalist," in which she betrays some startling secrets of the trade; John Oliver Hobbes in "The Flute of Pan' has written a kind of "Graustark" story, with all her fine literary art; Max Pemberton's "The Hundred Days" tells of wild days in Paris and the Battle of Waterloo; and one of the finest books on the list is "Patricia, a Mother." Holiday gift books of luxurious manufacture have been made of the ever popular stories—Parker's "Seats of the Mighty," and "Nancy Stair." Holiday attractions have also been bestowed upon Kipling's poems, "The Seven Seas," but we all know that the swing and the go and the bigness of Kipling will carry "The Seven Seas" farther than all de luxe accessories.

BAKER & TAYLOR Co. offer a true holiday book in their attractive edition of Dickens's ever-popular "A Christmas Carol" and the "Cricket on the Hearth," with a sympathetic introduction and illustrations in color and line by George Alfred Williams. Two books appealing to all art students are "The Appreciation of Pictures," by Russell Sturgis; and "The Impressions of Japanese Architecture and the Allied Arts," by Ralph Adams Cram. Mr. Sturgis's book is a companion volume to his "How to Judge Architecture;" and "The Appreciation of Sculpture." The new volume deals historically with pictures and furnishes a basis for a thorough understanding of them. The large number of paintings reproduced in the work, many of them rare and unusual, add greatly to its value, and as far as text goes probably no man is better fitted than Russell Sturgis, who is acknowledged America's foremost critic of the arts. Ralph Adams Cram also easily holds his place among the leading architects of the United He makes clear that Japanese States. architecture must be studied with knowledge of the great difference between the characteristics of the Far Eastern and the Far Western races, and then he gives an exhaustive ac-count of world-renowned buildings and of the ideas and events of which they are the lasting and visible proof. Everything Japanese is interesting the world at the moment, and this beautifully illustrated book will be of enduring worth to all serious students of the history and art of this wonderfully progressive nation which rests its newest achievements upon its far-reaching ancient history. Little gifts to serious friends may be made of the new paper editions of Josiah Strong's popular moral appeals, entitled "The Next Great Awakening" and "The Times and Young Men;" and for older people who remember the life so cleverly described there can be no more appropriate gift than "When You Were a Boy," by Edwin L. Sabin, with 50 illustrations by Frederic Dorr Steele, showing boy-life as these older readers lived it. Richard Le Gallienne's "Romances of Old France," a companion to his "Old Love Stories Retold," once again tells the famous Troubadour romances, and is artistically illustrated and decorated in color. For those who love a good story beyond all else there is a novel by a new writer, Margaret P. Montague, called "The Poet, Miss Kate and I." In the form of a diary the "I," a young girl living amidst the most beautiful scenery of the Alleghany Mountains, tells of her close companionship with "Miss Kate," a little chestnut mare, until together they met "the poet," who became the guiding influence of "Ts" life.

A. S. Barnes & Co. have secured a prize in "The Shakespeare Story Book," by Mary MacLeod, and an introduction by Sidney Lee, surely an unimpeachable authority, who recommends the author's work as very well done. This work is fully noticed in our front pages. Another Shakespeare book of great interest on the Barnes list is Tudor Jenks's delightful picture given through "In the Days of Shakespeare," also full of good illustrations. All collectors of American literature must have the four-volume India Paper edition of "The Works of Edgar Allan Poe," and it will be more than welcome to all who can appreciate the work of this most distinctively original of all American writers. Also appealing specially to American students of history are two new volumes in the excellent Trail Makers Series: "Voycellent Trail Maker's Series: "Voyages and Explorations of Samuel de Champlain," narrated by himself, translated by Annie Nettleton Bourne, with introduction to the two volumes by Edward Gaylord Bourne; "The Journeys of La Salle and His Companions, 1668-1687, as Related by Himself and His Followres," with introduction by Professor Isaac J. Cox; "Life in the Eighteenth Century," by George Cary Eggleston with a comparative summary of historical events by Professor Herman V. Ames, a fine index and many illustrations. Mr. Eggleston sketches the building and furnishing of the more luxurious homes in Virginia and in the Northern cities. He outlines the customs of social life and the growth of trade and industry. While political and military facts are set down in their order the main purpose of the book is to give in convenient form an interesting story of life, manners and customs during the colonial period from 1700 to the outbreak of the revolution. Every insurance man, be he "fire" or "life," will be very grateful for Miles Menander Dawson's "The Business of Life Insurance. The author is one of the most eminent actuaries and insurance experts in this country, and has written this practical, comprehensive and much-needed book for the special use of the great public composed of persons nearly all of whom purchase insurance on their lives. The fiction published this year by this house has been of a high order of merit. "The Cherry Ribband," by S. R. Crockett, makes direct appeal to all who contributed to make "The Lilac Sunbonnet" a record-making book; "Squire Phin," by Holman F. Day, is a treasure house of the humor and oddity of "Draw Fact," which has its action considerable and the statement of the sta "Down East," which has its social comedies and little social comedies and family dramas if not tragedies as well as the largest cities; "The Heart of a Girl," by Ruth Kimball Gardiner, is a fine study of a clever, introspective, intense girl who begins life in Illinois, then spends years in Dakota and Nebraska "boom" towns; "Lodgings in Town," by Henry Arthur, author of "An Island Cabin" and "The House in the Woods," completes the trilogy of books that tell what the author passed through whilst seeking an ideal form of existence far from our great modern rush, and it is filled with the curious characteristics of city living, especially in the unique lodging life of New York City; "The Mountain of Fears," by Henry C. Rowland, tells the strange adventures of Dr. Leyden as collector, world traveller, scientist, adventurer, traveller, and keenest of observers of men and things, and represents story telling of singular dramatic power; and Charles Battell Loomis, always cheery and full of happy news, tells of "Minerva's Manœuvres," Minerva being a colored cook whom a young couple took with them to the country where they wished to "return to nature," and who disliked nature and quiet above all things, and kept her mistress constantly bribing and conciliating her to make her threaten less frequently that she must go right back to New York.

Benziger Brothers, New York, have reading matter specially designed for Catholic readers, and it is well to know of such books, so that we may be sure that we give nothing that can in any way hurt a member of that church, as we might if we offer him a Prot-estant view of life or religion. There are several works of fiction ready considered specially suitable for young girls: "Out of Bondage," by Martin Holt; "The Children of Cupa," by Mary E. Mannix; "For the White Rose," by Katharine Tynan Hinkson; "The Dollar Hunt," translated from the French by E. G. Martin; and "The Violin Maker," translated from the German original of Otto v. Schacking, by Sara Trainer Smith. There is also a book of excellent short stories entitled "Where the Road Led, and Other Stories," by such well-known authors as Anna T. Sadlier, Maurice F. Eagan, Alice Richardson, Jerome Harte and several others. In books of devotion choice may be made of "Theory and Practice of the Confessional," by Dr. Caspar F. Shieler; 'Mary, the Queen;" "St. Francis of Assisi, Social Reformer," by Rev. Leo L. Dubois; and a new edition of "Meditations on the Passion of Our Lord," by a Passionist Father.

BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY have a new Christy-Longfellow book this year devoted to "Evangeline," certainly a fitting heroine to stand with Priscilla the Puritan of last year's Christy-Longfellow's "Courtship of Miles Standish." The "Evangeline" has already been fully described in our front pages. Other pretty volumes of gift-book poetry are "Songs o' Cheer," by James Whitcomb Riley, with over 100 Hoosier pictures in color and black and white by Will Vawter, another volume of Riley's poems of gladness, content and consolation, which have walked so straight into the hearts of the American people, and which will scatter smiles and laughter, as it is a deadly enemy of the blues; and "Banjo Talks," by Anne Virginia Culbertson, who is a perfect master of negro dialect, and whose merry, careless rhythmical singing and dancing tunes are illustrated with many photographs of actual plantation scenes. Then comes gift-book fiction, a new order of book classification, but really very happily named. Of such is "The House of a Thou-sand Candles," by Meredith Nicholson, author of "The Main Chance," who tells a story of a globe trotter who by his grandfather's will was forced to spend one whole year in a candle-lighted palace by an Indiana lake. If he left his place of exile his inheritance would revert to a beautiful girl; if he married this girl the estate would go to charity. Truly a promising plot which has inspired Howard Chandler Christy to make some fine pictures, which are printed in rich colors, and the book in its blue cover, with red title and many candles, looks a holiday book of the real kind. "The Social Secretary," by David Graham Phillips, appears in a dress so beautiful that she herself would give it approval. She taught a family in high place in Washington how to fittingly occupy that place, and her story is a delightful one. In Harold MacGrath's "Hearts and Masks" the publishers have found a little gem, and they have mounted it with fine taste and set it off with twelve delicate Frenchy illustrations in color and a very fetching cover design by Harrison Fisher. The author of the great success, "The Man on the Box," has written another gay, rollicking story of a masquerade in which the hero took an uninvited part and got out of many troubles into good old-fashioned love for life all in twelve hours. A little comedy of country manners is "Seffy," a story of Pennsylvania Germans by John Luther Long, whose fine work in "Madame Butterfly" has been outdone in this later story of free and genial humor and touching pathos. "Seffy" has been made "gift-fiction" by the illustrations of C. D. Williams and the decorations in color of Earl Stetson Crawford. Just as sure to please, though not quite dressed up enough externally for holiday festivities, are "The Deluge," by David Graham Phillips, a tale of American finance sure to please fathers and brothers: and "The Man of the Hour," Octave Thanet's great story of the descendant of a hardheaded American captain of industry and finance and a high-strung Russian princess with anarchistic sympathies, which has all the qualities of a fine work of fiction, a noble motive, an imaginative plot and pure literary style. Other stories to be called for and looked at when buying for friends that care for fiction are 'Heart's Haven," by Katharine Evans Blake; "The Storm Signal," by Gustave Frederick Mertins; "The Best Policy," by Elliott Flower; and "Pipe-Town Sandy," by John Philip Sousa," who has put all the brilliancy, dash and "go" with which he leads an orchestra into his story of East Washing tow in the civilize before the echoes of the ton in the sixties before the echoes of the great war had quite died away. Besides all these fine things in song and fiction this house provides some good presents for those of Marion Harland's book of "Everyday Etiquette" is just the thing to give a young girl who will take things said by others so much better than what mother tries to teach her; and Margaret E. Sangster's "Radiant Motherhood" might open the eyes of some friend who thinks of her children as only a trouble. Full of suggestions for sensible young men is Orison Swett Marden's "Choosing a Career;" and "Letters of Labor and Love," by Samuel M. Jones.

Brentano's appeal to people of large culture and cosmopolitan liberality in their provision for Christmas purchasers. Of course this special class of society is at present discussing Bernard Shaw and his purpose, his standing in the literary and dramatic world and his future among the writers of this generation. Brentano's have on their list "The Irrational Knot," a novel Shaw wrote at the age of twenty-five, dealing with the problem of marriage in society of every class. He has recently looked this over and written one of his excellent prefaces, in which he compares his work with that of Ibsen and shows how they both have earnest purpose and a plan of work for humanity; and "Man and Superman," with text entirely unabridged, is brought out in a pretty edition of this comedy and philosophy. Oscar Wilde, who also needs a cultured audience, is represented by "Intentions," containing four of his most characteristic essays: "The Decay of Lying," "Pen, Pencil and Poison," "The Critic as Artist," and "The Truth of Masks." Agreeable, gossipy reading are the "Letters from Catalonia," by Rowland Thirlmere, containing a new and absolutely authentic portrait of Alaborac ways. absolutely authentic portrait of Alphonso XIII. and two colored frontispieces in the two volumes; and Theophile Gautier's "Italy," with twenty-seven photogravures by Daniel B. Vermilye. A series of small pocket-size volumes, carefully selected and printed from the wise and witty words of the great writers of all countries is called the Wisdom Series. In all countries is called the Wisdom Series. In it are to be had "Polonius: a collection of wise saws and modern instances," "The Wisdom of Robert Louis Stevenson," and "The Wisdom of Oscar Wilde." A most timely book is "Russia in Revolution." by G. H. Perris, with photogravure frontispiece of Stepniak and eighteen other illustrations. For musical friends consult the Music of the Masters series, edited by Wakeling Dry. The volumes now ready are "Wagner," "Beethoven" and "Tchaikovski." For those who like a good English novel "The Rose of Life," by M. E. Braddon, will make a desirable present. The scene shifts between London and the Riviera and five characters work the plot: a poet, his adoring wife, a woman of the world, the daughter she is unfit to protect and the man who is the lover.

H. M. CALDWELL Co. make holiday gift books and make them very attractive always. This year they are quite up to their usual average of books for every friend of every taste. "The Value of Courage," edited by the taste. "The Value of Courage," edited by the late Frederic Lawrence Knowles, a representative collection of prose and verse extracts which may be described as a specific for worry, fear, depression of spirits and all forms of cowardice, physical, moral and spiritual; and there is another equally pretty book entitled "The Value of Simplicity," with selections chosen by Mary M. Barrows whose book on "The Value of Cheerfulness" was so popular last season. Both these books are printed on cameo buff paper in two colors, are bound in silk moire and white vellum cloth and boxed; and they also appear in a de luxe dress of full maroon suede, silk lined. and have besides a medium costume of full limp chamois, satin lined. A very dainty thing is made of Dickens' "Christmas Carol," with photogravure frontispiece and twelve halftone illustrations, which is shaped like a holy bell and put in fancy binding, and two more shape books that will take are "Automobilia," by Charles Welsh, with an interesting article on the evolution of the automobile, printed on antique buff paper in two colors; and "Love's Garland," by the same compiler, shaped like a ring, containing an admirable collection of short poems on love, interspersed with the poesies anciently written on lovers' rings and bracelets. Fourteen titles have been added to the Red Letter Library, amongst which are selected poems by Cowper, Tennyson, Byron, Herbert, Johnson, Coleridge, Milton, Long-fellow, etc., with introductions by specially capable talent. These are exquisite bits of bookmaking and may be had in full limp leather, or in the Bibelot edition in full embossed calf with full gilt edges. Many new titles have come into the Remarque edition of Literary Masterpieces and there can be no prettier way of presenting "Atala," "The Gold Bug," "Paul and Virginia," "Undine" and many other of the little gems the world has loved for so many years. This house also puts standard works into the Alcazar Classics, the Paragon Series, the Sesame Classics and many, many more of the forms of distinctive beauty that these names stand for. For men, always so hard to choose for, this house has made most successful efforts. On their list are "In Bohemia," by James Clar-ence Harvey with dainty illustrations by Mucha, Hy. Myer, Outcault and others, which may also be had in the Parfait edition, superbly bound in polka dot silk in a scarlet covered box matching binding; "The Log of the Water Wagon," a graphic account of a cruise aboard that unpopular craft, by Bert Leston Taylor and W. C. Gibson, illustrated by M. L. Glackens; the smoker's own book of poetry, a captivating little volume of verse, compiled by Joseph Knight, the new book in the Smokers' Library which already holds the great favorites—"Tobacco in Song and Story," "My Lady Nicotine," and "Tobacco Leaves." The four books of this little library are put up in a cedar box with labels and marks as on a cigar box and would make a very suitable gift for a man in a whist or euchre contest. Year by year this house turns out very popular holiday gift books.

Century Company always appeals to people of culture and educated taste, and this year it makes them hesitate long what they shall take if they can only have one of three of the most important books provided. Charles H. Caffin's "How to Study Pictures" will perhaps commend itself to the largest public as a giftbook and a full description of this invaluable work for art lovers, students and travellers has already been given in our front pages. The other two are "Versailles and the Court Under Louis xiv.," by James Eugene Farmer; and "With the Empress Dowager," by Katharine Carl. The work on Versailles is at once historically accurate and chronologically complete, and presents in a wonderful way the story of the people and events that reflected the glory and grandeur of the Grand Monarch and made of his palace and its environment the very sublimation of earthly pomp. Perhaps the most brilliant court Europe has ever seen—certainly the most lavish—nothing in history is quite like this picture of nobles and courtiers parading and intriguing in and out of Versailles at the end of the seventeenth century. The palace, the park, the king, the court are all minutely word-pictured by an expert hand and upwards of seventy-five illustrations, printed in the best style of Century Company, make still more clear a historical phenomenon at which all the world wonders. The author is a graduate of Yale and at present Master of History and English Literature at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H. "With the Empress Dowager," the simple narrative of an American woman's sojourn in China, reads like one's childish dreams of enchantment, though like most magical experiences, it came about simply enough. Miss Carl was visiting in Shanghai in April, 1903, when, through the influence of Mrs. Conger, wife of the United States Minister, she was invited to meet the Empress Dowager and begin work on a portrait. The one short sitting first granted led to the painting of four por-traits and to Miss Carl's becoming a guest at the Chinese Court for eleven months, a guest who saw the Dowager Empress daily and shared in every festival and function of the court. It is said that since Marco Polo Miss Carl has been the first staying guest in the palace of a Chinese sovereign. Miss Carl describes the daily life of the Chinese Court, its gay parties, its jealousies and its tragedies, and she makes her readers realize the wonderful ruler of 300,000,000 of people—the most wonderful woman in the world to-day. The portrait first painted was for the St. Louis Exposition last year. The illustrations add much to the book. They are both from photographs and from sketches made by Miss Carl, sketches which make one feel well acquainted with the wonderful Tze-Shi and her court. A treasure to put in the hands of every voting American is the "Autobiography of Andrew D. White," a living, breathing, inspiring record, not alone of a life which has been a powerful factor for good in American growth and progress, but of the people and events which have shaped American history and thought in the last half century. Mr. White has led a life filled to overflowing with active usefulness in many causes—education. politics, statecraft, diplomacy and literature, and he has written a sane, modest, entertaining story of his noble and really great career. A dainty gift to a lover of fine bookmaking may always be chosen from the Thumb-Nail Series, which every year brings a trio of Series, which every year brings a trio of world-approved works to set among their peers already enrolled. This year arrive Dickens's "The Chimes," with frontispiece in green by Relyea; "Washington," containing the principal state papers of Washington, including his forewell address with ington, including his farewell address, with introduction on the character of Washington, taken from Lecky's "Eighteenth Century England," and "Sonnets from the Portuguese," with three poems of Robert Browning and a 50-page introduction by

"'STOP! SHE CALLED HOTLY."

Richard Watson Gilder, telling once more of the ideal marriage of these two great poets. Remarkably fine fiction is also on the Century Co.'s list. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's name "leads all the rest." His powerful story of "Constance Trescott" tells the tale of a woman's vendetta, and presents in the young wife one of the most impressive and individual characters in recent fiction, and shows a striking grasp of the conditions which followed the Civil War. But there are several more for which our lists elsewhere must be consulted. And the books of our President must not be overlooked, This house has "The Strenuous Life," "Hero Tales from American History," and "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail."

C. M. CLARK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Boston, have a very promising book in "Around the World in Ninety Days," by Frederick Chamberlin, the well-known Boston lawyer, who describes a tour of three months he was obliged to take, he having been sent quite unexpectedly to the Philippines upon a secret mission. The work has upwards of 300 illustrations, chiefly from snapshots taken by the author, of native life in Hawaii, China, Ceylon, Africa, Arabia, Italy and the Philippines. There is great historical value to much of Mr. Chamberlin's material and he gives facts about Queen Liliuokalani that no other white man has ever been able to get at. There is also a chapter on Aguinaldo that is of great interest, as is the account of Mount Vesuvius which the writer saw in full eruption. The book is gotten out as a handsome gift-book and gives a very remarkable showing of what can be accomplished in three months. Together with Nathan J. Coffee, Lydia Ann Jocelyn has written "Lords of the Soil," which gives a very realistic picture of early life in America among the Indians and Colonial settlers; "The Man from Maine," by Frank Carlos Griffith, who tells of a man who did not know what golf was, but after he had been a little while in New York City was able to hoodwink the wiliest of the men who tried to trade upon his inexperience; and there is another novel by James Ball Naylor, whose "Ralph Marlowe" touched the 100,000 mark. The new story is called "The Kentuckian."

THE WILLIAM COLLINS COMPANY have several editions of Shakespeare, and Shakespeare never comes amiss as a Christmas gift. "The Complete Shakespeare" may be had in one volume, on ordinary and on India paper; in the latter style less than one inch in thickness, with sixty-five illustrations and gotten up in various styles of binding from artistic cloth to rich full morocco; "The Gem Shakespeare" is a six volume set, printed on India paper in large type, with 217 illustrations, also bound in cloth or full crushed morocco; and "The Stage Shakespeare" is in forty volumes, one to each play, with 300 illustrations to the set. In paste grain morocco this makes a very dainty set of Shakespeare and a very luxurious gift. Bibles also are among the most popular of presents, and this house controls Collins' Clear Type Press Bibles in all sizes, with excellent type and artistic bindings of every kind and description. Twenty-four of the most famous novels of the English language are also ready to give away in the Handy Pocket Novel series.

T. Y. Crowell & Co. have a novelty this season, an original book sure to please every devotee of the motor car who has turned the wheel and felt the rhythmic chug-chug of the regine, or has perchance reclined upon his back in the dust of the roadside peering up into the cranks and pistons and wondering why the wheels do not go round; and equally sure to please the other fellow, the one beset by plunging horse, squawking horn, choking dust or the lingering odor of gasoline. Its name is "Auto Fun" and it has been drawn from the witty pages of Life and shows the merry jibes and jests of such artists as Gibson, Kemble, Cushing, Bayard Jones, C. F. Taylor, Read and a score of lesser lights, equally fortunate in their drawings and skits about the all pervading automobile. illustrations are reproduced full-page size and show to great advantage, handsomely printed and bound in original style. An ideal gift because of its novelty and attractiveness is Crowell's Miniature edition of "Irving's Selected Works," a set of books comprising "The Sketch-Book," "Christmas Sketches," "The Alhambra," "Bracebridge Hall" and "Tales of a Traveller," printed on fine India paper and bound in limp ooze leather, all fitted into a case that can be slipped into one's pocket. The type is anything but microscopic. It is of bold face and well leaded in its I1/2 x 21/2 inch dimensions, easy to read and restful to the eye. Information and entertainment are blended enjoyably in Mrs. Sara K. Bolton's "Famous American Authors," covering Emerson, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell, with portraits and scenes printed in two colors; and Gustav Kobbé's "The Loves of Great Composers," telling the romances of Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt and Wagner, with illustrations also printed in tint and done up in art leather with gilt top and neatly boxed. The several thousand readers of Oliver Huckel's "Parsifal" will be glad to hear that he has done the same fine work for "Lohengrin," the son of Parsifal, giving a good English literary setting of the drama and interpreting the stage scenes of Wagner's opera in a real and vivid way. In our rushing, "strenuous" life it is well to pause and weigh well such books as "The Happy Life," in which the venerable president of Harvard University makes his powerful plea for simplicity of living; "The Inward Life," by Amory H. Bradford, who explains "there is in every man light sufficient to disclose all the truth that is needed for the purpose of life;" "When the Song Begins," by Dr. J. R. Miller, brimming over with the constant, helpful optimism of the well-beloved author; and "Vital Questions," by Dr. Henry Dwight Chapin, wholesome, suggestive talks on "Inequality," "Poetry," "The Child," "Health," "Education," "Success" and other questions that come up continually to be settled for so-ciety and for the individual. For any girl contemplating marriage before another year goes round a fitting, dainty gift is "The Diary of a Bride," full of humor and philosophy as well as of lists of pretty things, and giving an account of the first year of housekeeping and home-making that teaches many needed lessons in a very happy way. "The Latin Poets," an anthology by Nathan Haskell Dole, covers the whole of Roman literature from Plautus and Terence to Juvenal and Lucan, and generous selections are given from all the greatest poets in translations also made by the greatest English poets. This house makes a specialty of books to give as presents, and gets up all the favorite literature of the world each year in newer and more tempting shape. The Grolier Booklets in flexible silk include such treasures as "Elegy in a Country Churchyard," "Marjorie Fleming," "Enoch Arden," "Pippa Passes," "Sonnets from the Portuguese," and others fit to stand with them; the Handy Volume Classics are known through all lands and every year add new "old favorites," as do the Illustrated Poets, the Luxembourg Library, the ever-welcome What is Worth While series, which this season brings J. R. Miller's "Beauty of Kindness;" Annie Russell Marble's "Books in Their Seasons;" and Bishop Potter's "The Drink Problem;" and the very dainty Chiswick Series, in which the newcomer is "An Emerson Calendar," compiled by Huntington Smith, printed at the Merrymount Press, finely illustrated, and artistically bound. You can find gifts for friends of every taste if you ask to see T. Y. Crowell's holiday books.

Dodd, Mead & Company have prepared several illustrated gift books, among the most attractive of which is Paul Leicester Ford's "His Version of It," which is one of the most clever short stories Mr. Ford ever wrote. It is a bright little love story, in which the happy end is brought about by a very interesting horseback ride on which the horses compare notes and converse about the queer actions of "the humans" with whom they are brought into such close daily contact. Illustrated in color by Henry Hutt, with marginal pictures and artistic cover design, this makes an attractive presentation volume. A light, breezy romance of the time of Paul Jones is called "My Lady's Slipper," and is written by Cyrus Townsend Brady, who lays his scene in Paris, where his hero goes through surprising adventures, all printed in two colors and suitably illustrated, by Mrs. Weber Ditzler; Maurice Maeterlinck's "Old-Fashioned Flowers," illustrated in color, with ornamental decoration, gives a most suitable holiday dress to Maeterlinck's charming essays, "Field Flowers" and "Chrysanthemums," and the one which gives the book its title; there is a finely illustrated edition of Tennyson's "Maud;" a new volume of poems by Paul Laurence Dunbar, illustrated from photographs, called "Howdy, Honey, Howdy," which show the author's remarkable insight and appreciation of the possibilities of his own race; and a record of life and travel in Burma, by V. C. Scott-O'Connor, with map, 400 illustrations and twenty colored plates after paintings by J. R. Middleton, Mrs. Ottway, Wheeler Cuffe and native artists. Other works to be examined are "The Artist's Way of Working," by Russell Sturgis, with 200 illustrations; "Great Portraits Described by Great Writers," by Esther Singleton, another volume chosen from the world's literature in which the impressions that great portraits have made on such men as Goethe, Shelley, Dumas, Ruskin, Dickens and Thackeray are given in words that have become classic; a volume showing again the author's literary and artistic taste, as shown in "Great Pictures" and "A Guide to the Opera," but adding a new human interest to her fine work; and "Cathedral Cities of England," by George Gilbert, who describes the great cathedrals and all the history and poetry that hinges round them, and whose work is made very effective by upwards of sixty full-page illustrations in color, by W. W. Collins. Of the last work there is also a de luxe edition, with the illustrations mounted on art paper, which in its handsome binding, lying in its protecting box, is certainly a presentation volume in every finished detail. For lovers of history and biography the preparation is lavish. If you are well provided with the necessary gold you can give a student of American history the "Original Journals of Lewis and Clark," in seven volumes, edited by Reuben Gold Thwaites, illustrated with portraits, views, maps, plans and facsimiles; or gotten up on large paper with colored illustrations or in a de luxe edition in fifteen volumes, with pictures colored by hand. The moneyed man of many a town should present this great record of the opening of our vast West to the public library of his locality. To Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace belongs the distinction of having separately, and a few years earlier than Darwin, formulated a theory of evolution which is substantially the same as Darwin's. His autobiography is issued under the title "My Life: a Record of Events and Opinions," and is a notable addition to the literature that tells of the days when Darwin, Huxley and Spencer thought the New Thought of the nineteenth century. "The Romance of Royalty" will appeal to the large constituency that "doth love a lord" and can never hear too much of the doings of those of royal blood. It gives the histories of four royal personages, all of whom were alive and in Europe but a few years back—Ludwig II. of Bavaria, Isabella II. of Spain, the Empress Eugenie, and the Duchess d'Alengon—and surely they all furnished romance to their generation. Fitzgerald Molloy writes of the secret side of court life with intimate knowledge and remarkable skill. A. Barbeau treats of "The World of Fashion and of Letters at Bath Under Queen Anne and the Georges," when Bath was the greatest meeting place of a totally vanished phase of English society. Gilbert K. Chesterton has written "A Life of Charles Dickens," which cannot fail to be novel, piquant and interesting, a dis-tinct contribution to the controversy that is perennial regarding Charles Dickens's place in English literature. In "Twenty Years of the Republic" Professor Harry Thurston Peck has given the essence of a wonderful mass of contemporary newspapers, cartoons, books, letters and other interesting memoranda, covering from the Cleveland - Blaine presidential campaign of 1884 to the present day, and the professor writes as one who has given the rein to his favorite hobby. The work reveals not only the wide and mature point of view of the trained scholar, but also the many little touches and personal peculiarities which go so far to-ward making his-tory, but which are so easily and quickly forgotten. Dr. Gustav Kobbé has looked behind the veil of romance that has so long linked the names of Richard Wagner and Mathilde Wesendonk, and has now shared with the world the secret of the great genius and the woman who inspired his Isolde in "Wagner and His Isolde," containing the correspondence between these great artists, which will be eagerly awaited in translation by the untold numbers of Wagner worshippers. All parts of the world would seem almost familiar as our own after the many books of travel we constantly réceive, but new scenes are opened up in "A Yankee"

in Pigmy Land," in which William Edgar Geil writes the narrative of a journey across Africa from Mombasa, through the great pigmy forest to Banana, a thrilling book with more than 100 illustrations to make its wonders real. And then Dodd, Mead & Co. have excellent fiction, all on record in the book list elsewhere. "Nedra," by George Barr Mc-Cutcheon of "Graustark" fame, is notable in that the title reads backwards "Arden," a fitting name for the little island where the lovers meet their fate; and "The Man from Red Keg," by Eugene Thwing, are among the best stories of this prolific season. And Dodd, Mead & Co. have calendars, works of great beauty. Those that stand out in the long list are Harrison Fisher's "The Beverly Calendar" and Hamilton Wright Mabie's "The Nature Calendar," both with colored illustrations, and very artistic gifts this season.

Dodge Publishing Co. have a most attractive array of gift books, booklets and artistic holiday editions of favorite poems, essays and masterpieces, tempting almost all tastes. Edmund Vance Cooke's child-verses won wide recognition in the Saturday Evening Post, and in dainty book form will appeal to a large audience, in their poetic charm and deep insight into childish thought and character. Catharine Moriarty's most popular verses have also been gathered into a pretty volume, with the title "Friendship's Fragrant Fancies;" and there are artistic new editions of Palgrave's "Golden Treasury" and the "Rubaiyat," the latter in a rich Oriental edition with a remarkable series of photographic illustrations by Adelaide Hanscom, border designs and decorations. In the Little Books of Art and the Little Gallery Series there are new volumes, each dealing with a famous artist, which will be welcomed by every lover of art. "A Cynic's Meditations," by Walter Pulitzer, is a delightful little volume of epigrams and philosophic reflections, hitting off the inconsistencies of life and the teachings of experience; Jeannie Gillespie Pennington's two small volumes called "Don't Fret" and "Have Courage" will bring kindly counsel and inspiring help to many who find everyday cares weigh heavily; and Elizabeth Hamill Davis has compiled a most helpful year's treasury, giving "For Each Day a Prayer," drawn from many and varied sources. Charming little booklets that carry the spirit of Christmas greeting have been provided in the series called Great Ideals, in which appear Bishop Brooks's Christmas carol, Van Dyke's "Love," Stevenson's "Morning Prayer" and Emerson's "Friendship;" while as Little Prose Masterproces "Wandering Willie's Tale," "Rab and His Friends" and Rossetti's "Hand and Soul' are brought out as dainty volumes. Another attractive gift book, original in idea and execution, is "The Original Letters," containing Cupid's diary, and allied private correspondence, a pressed flower, and newspaper clippings of allied interest, all illustrated by Rosalie Arthur and bound in white and scarlet. Indeed, any who seek some dainty and appropriate message of friendly greeting, of witty philosophy or good cheer, will find much on this firm's list to select from.

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY appeal to a world-wide public of animal lovers in Schillings's "Flashlight in the Jungle." The author, a noted German traveller, hunter and scientist, has made repeated journeys into equatorial Africa that he might study its wild life, human and animal. On his last trip, in 1903, he took an elaborate photographic outfit suitable for telephotography and flashlight work, and with this he has made a collection of over 300 pictures of wild animals in their native haunts impossible to duplicate. His text reads like a story of adventure, and the book has met with instant success in Germany. Frederic Whyte is responsible for the English translation, for which that other famous African traveller, Sir Harry Johnston, has written an introduction, and President Roosevelt has added a letter of appreciation. Very different in subject is Mrs. Bayard Taylor's volume of reminiscences and biography, "On Two Continents." As the daughter of the great German mathematician and astronomer, Hansen, and as wife of the American traveller, diplomatist and man of letters, she was brought in contact with the leading men and women of her day on both sides of the water. earlier chapters, describing her life in the quiet German town of Gotha, are followed by her experiences after her marriage with Bayard Taylor. There are anecdotes of George William Curtis, Aldrich, the Brownings, Thackeray, Swinburne, Bismarck and scores of others, as well as the most intimate por-trayal so far published of her husband. Excellent illustrations visualize these glimpses of men and places. Another charming and informing volume of memories will be found in Mrs. A. Giraud Wright's "A Southern Girl in '61." Mrs. Wright was the daughter of Senator Wigfall, of Texas, and had ample opportunities to study the history and social life of the Confederacy. Her narrative is spirited, revealing both the bright and tragic aspects of those years, and it is illustrated by thirtyodd portrait reproductions. No better gift for your tourist friend can be secured than "Paintings of the Louvre," wherein Dr. Arthur Mahler gives a comprehensive description of the Spanish and Italian sections of this wonderful collection. Indeed, so large is the number of Italian artists represented in the Louvre that Dr. Mahler's book is virtually a history of Italian art. One hundred and sixty-six reproductions of the pictures and an appendix containing a complete list of the Spanish and Italian paintings in the Louvre complete a valuable art work. Interesting both from its artistic and personal import is Oliver B. Capen's "Country Homes of Famous Americans," describing the loved

"The Tree Book," by Julia E. Rogers, also copiously illustrated, contains a fund of information for student and home-maker. Lest the inner man should suffer while the home is being made beautiful, within and without, Doubleday, Page have provided "The International Cook Book," by Alexander Filip homes of seventeen Americans of note from Washington to Horace Greeley, accompanied by many photographic glimpses. Then in E. C. Holtzoper's "The Country House" we learn how to plan and build the country home for Americans who may yet—who can tell?—become famous. Practical advice on site, building, plumbing, garden, etc., makes this a most admirable work. "Ferns and How to Grow Them," by G. A. Woolson, will be a welcome gift to the amateur gardener and botanist, be he in town or country; while pini, formerly of Delmonico's. As usual, this house has a sheaf of entertaining novels. There is "The Missourian," by Eugene P. Lyle, Jr., giving the adventures of an intrepid American in the Mexico of Maximilian and Carlotta; or, Maud Wilder Goodwin's "Claims and Counterclaims," a study of conflicting feeling regarding the man who has saved the hero's life; or, Charles W. Chesnutt's "The Colonel's Dream," a story of a Southerner who returns to his old home and is brought in contact with the old-new negro problem. Then we can be amused by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd's new creation, "Concerning Belinda," sketching the characters and incidents in a New York finishing school for girls. "Sons o' Men," by a new author, G. B. Lancaster, presents in a series of short stories a little known group of men, the sheep shearers and cattlemen of New Zealand. "Ayesha," Rider Haggard's sequel to that absorbing romance of many years ago, "She," needs no commendation; it's readers are eagerly awaiting it. And there will also be an audience for "Old Lim Jucklin's" philosophy on life and things as delivered on the cross-roads' horse-block in North Carolina and set down by Opie Read. A special holiday gift book to satisfy the most exacting taste is the new edition of Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," illustrated by Arthur Rackman and bound in handsome style. There are also new volumes in James Watson's "Dog Book," a veritable cyclopedia of canine lore; and a suggestive work by Meredith Nugent on "New Games and Amusements."

E. P. Dutton & Co. present a royal gift for the holidays in "The Furniture of Windsor Castle," a book of great artistic and historic value, issued by command of His Majesty, King Edward vII. It has been most skilfully prepared by Guy Francis Laking, keeper of the King's Armory. In the account of these vast and priceless treasures they are divided and periods, and the more important of them are represented by plates of the most beautiful character, in which the smallest details are exquisitely brought out. The text also gives a full and minute description of each piece enumerated, and its associations, and the introduction gives historical account of the royal collection. The book is bound in royal gray, with a light tan rough grained leather back, and has the king's monogram on the cover. 'French Songs of Old Canada," pictured by W. Graham Robertson, is an artistic gift book of exceptional charm. There are thirty-one handcolored reproductions of the artist's sketches and several in black and white, beautifully illustrating the spirit of the text. Fifteen old illustrating the spirit of the text. Canadian French ballads, with the music to which they were sung and an English translation, constitute the text, which is lettered throughout by Mr. Robertson. Beautiful throughout by Mr. Robertson. Beautiful books of travel are "The High Road of Empire, Sketches in India and Elsewhere," by A. H. Hallam Murray, author of that delightful color book of last year, "Along the Old Road Through France to Florence," with forty-six plates and many black and white line drawings; "In the Track of the Moors," by Sybil Fitzgerald, with 50 illustrations in color and many drawings by Augustine Fitzgerald, an excellent study of the Moors, their architecture and their activities in various fields; "Normandy," by Gordon Home, the English traveller and artist, who describes the scenery and romance of the oft-sung and pictured Normandy, and with his colored and white and black illustrations makes an ideal gift book; "Casertino," in which Ella Noyes describes this pretty Italian province and Dora Noyes furnishes thirty colored and many other illustrations of this picturesque spot and its frank, friendly people; and "The Cities of Umbria," by Edward Hutton, who describes Assisi, Spoleto and many minor places where he studied the art of the past and the beauty of all time. After all there are no books like the old books, and this house is specially rich in new settings for the old favorites. The Temple edition of "The Novels of the Brontë sisters is now complete in ten volumes, with colored illustrations by Edward Dulac; a new Play-to-a-Volume edition of "Shakespeare," edited by Georg Brandes, has the Cambridge text, and a photogravure frontispiece of some famous actor in each of the forty volumes that make the pretty set; Dickens's "A Christmas Carol," pretty set; Dickens's "A Christmas Carol,"

"The Cricket on the Hearth" and "The Chimes" are brought out, with illustrations by Charles E. Brock, and may be had singly or boxed as a set; to the English Idyl Series is added "Silas Marner," with pictures in color by the same artist that did the Dickens books; and "A Study of Brahms" goes into the Master Musicians Series; and a new series sure of great popularity is the Temple Topogwhich will consist of little books on raphies. beautiful places described and illustrated by The Duttons also run a specially experts. beautiful line of calendars, year-books and Christmas cards.

Paul Elder & Company, San Francisco, are always happy in their selection of books specially suitable for gifts. If you have young friends just married you cannot do better than to give them "The Matrimonial Primer," by V. B. Ames, illustrated by Gordon Ross, exquisitely gotten up, as are all the publications of this house, and full of sound advice humorously and wittily put:

"When your husband seems willing that all the economy shall be at the home end, insist upon laundering his shirts yourself." "When you are married, be a good comrade if it breaks every canon of your church and ancestry." Another very clever compilation, devoted to quotations from a wide range of literature, is "Sovereign Woman vs. Mere Man," in which Jennie Day Haines selected with much discrimination and for which Gordon Ross and Spencer Wright have furnished the artistic element. The prettily decorated pages on the left side of the book are devoted to "sovereign woman," the right hand pages to "mere man." Printed on Japanese paper and bound in Rhinos Bokhara boards the book is odd and very pleasing externally, and its contents are a literary treasure. Woman at her highest and noblest also figures in "Womanhood in Art," by Phebe Estelle Spalding, consisting of interpretations of impressions produced upon an observer in true sympathy with the genius that produced the Venus de Milo, Mona Lisa, Beatrice Cenci, the Sistine Madonna, etc. The book is illustrated with toned reproductions of the original world-famed works of art. A very clever idea is "The Joke Book Note Book," bound flexibly and made to fit in a man's pocket, with a sample joke to show the subject, followed by blank pages for the recording of fugitive jokes he may pick up when he stops "to see a man" while his dinner waits at home. The subject index is made of little thumb drawings of "darkies," "Irish," "British," etc. It's just the thing to give a social bachelor. Another happy find is "The Blue Monday Book," for which Jennie Day Haines has compiled optimistic quotations and for which the publishers have provided a blue dress set off with morning-glories. Provision is also made for those not so full of fun and frolic, and the house has chosen its booklets of religious nature with all the old judgment and exquisite taste. "Bible Mosaics" is the collective name of a little series of four volumes separately christened "Promises," "Commands," "Admonitions" and "Answers." The Bible quotations of which these booklets are composed are woven into consecutive little essays in the cleverest way by Agnes Green Foster, and the little volumes are brought out in several styles of binding, each more dainty than the last. A volume of lyrical verse, by C. G. Blanden, is entitled "A Chorus of Leaves," and is printed with border design in tint throughout and daintily bound in flexible vegetable parchment, making a charming presentation volume. The calendars and year-books of the house are legion. Among the very newest are "The Cynic's Calendar Entirely Complete" and "The Psychological Year Book." You can delight any friend with Paul Elder's pretty inventions.

Dana Estes & Company have a very handsome gift book entitled "Eve's Daughters," of which a full description has already been given. In the Lovers' Treasury Series they begin a new series of illustrated gift books, combining the qualities of charm and lasting value. Each volume contains thirty-two fullpage half-tones of portraits, historical studies or reproductions of celebrated paintings. The text consists of famous poems combined with explanatory comments in prose. Two volumes of these anthologies are ready this season. "The Art Lovers' Treasury" is edited by Carrie Thompson Lowell, and may be characterized as "Famous Pictures Described in Poems," containing reproductions of representative pictures and the poems great writers have written of them, all compiled most carefully by the well-known reader and educator of Portland, Me. The poets quoted comprise Dante, Keats, Browning, Longfellow, Whittier and many others, including younger and contemporary singers. The list of illustrations includes, to name a few at random, Fra Angelico's Madonna della Stella, Raphael's Sistine Madonna, Giotto's St. Francis Preach-Sistine Madonna, Giotto's St. Francis Preaching to the Birds, Da Vinci's Last Supper, Titian's Danae, Turner's The Fighting Temeraire, Millet's The Man with the Hoe, and Vedder's The Cup of Death. "The Music Lovers' Treasury" is edited by Helen Philbrook Potter, author of "The Years' Festivals." The number of poems addressed to musicians or written about musical instrumusicians or written about musical instruments will astonish any one who has not already examined this field for himself. The poets represented range from Shakespeare and Milton to the youngest of the choir of to-day, and the work of compilation has been most intelligently done. It is good news to many who with John Burroughs and Richard Henry Stoddard hailed the advent of a true poet in. Frederic Lawrence Knowles that there are new editions of his "Love Triumphant" and "On Life's Stairway," which were revised by him before his much-lamented death and have been asked for so persistently as to insure a new success for this poetry of a high order of literary and spiritual merit. This year there is a Cabinet edition of "Shakespeare" in twenty volumes, edited by William J. Rolfe and other Shakespearean scholars, of which the publishers are justly proud, which is very neat and remarkably reasonable in price. The volumes are lavishly illustrated with etchings and photogravures from the most celebrated paintings of Shakespearean subjects, many of which have never been available for reproduc-tion before. Among the artists whose names lend special significance to the illustrative features of the work are Emile Bayard, W. von Kaul-bach, L. Alma Tadema, Sir Frederick Leighton, Marcus Stone, Luke Fildes, and scores of others of equal eminence. A truly excellent story is "Mrs. Tree's Will," by "Mrs. Tree's Will," by Laura E. Richards, a sequel to "Mrs. Tree." In it the old lady dies at the age of nearly one hundred years, and her will, made with great thought, has consequences for the whole neighborhood, in which she exerted so strong an influence after the stormy days of her early life had come to a peaceful old age. The book is illus-trated by Julia Ward Richards. It should not be overlooked in choosing fiction this year for friends of quiet, literary taste and experienced knowledge of human nature. And all the old favorites on the list of the Estes house, which was always in the fore in the providing of holiday gift books, are ready for another successful season in new and even prettier bindings than heretofore.

A. B. Frost," with verse written by Wallace Irwin, at present at the very heighth of popularity, and an introduction by Joel Chandler Harris, who gives an excellent estimate of Frost as a distinctively American artist; and then the fine work of Kenyon Cox, entitled "Old Masters and New," has been put into a festive illustrated edition, with wide margins, and shows sixteen reproductions of celebrated pictures in which art Cox is surely also an old master, making the book far more valuable and also making it distinctively an illustrated holiday book. Also in dainty holiday dress comes the new and greatly enlarged edition of "The Fusser's Book," in which Anne Archbald and Georgina Jones have told young men and women how to behave in society, in a humorous manner that fixes all the good precepts indelibly on the minds of all fussers who want to be irresistible. The book has been expanded from forty to one hundred rules of conduct. Marguerite Merington has made the happiest kind of dramatization of Mrs, Gaskell's "Cranford," using almost wholly Mrs. Gaskell's words, a very clever piece of work, and the publishers have put the little literary feat into a very pretty binding, with a frontispiece in color by Edwin Wallick. Racy, witty verse on American conditions of the kind Wallace Irwin writes so well are bound up under the title "The Sign of the Dollar," and the verse has been illustrated by E. W. Kemble, who is also always racy, witty and American. The subjects joked about mention "The Panama Brook," "The Missionary and the Standard Oil," "Frenzied Finance," "Immigration," "The Reveries of a Whitewasher," etc. It is a book sure to make people laugh and also to make them think a little what lessons some of the fun brings home. "More Misrepresentative Men," by Harry Graham, with portraits

"''HOMER HOLLOPETER,' SHE SAID, 'WHAT IS THE NAME OF THIS VILLAGE?'"

by Malcolm Strauss, is a second collection of humorous verse on celebrities. These include Robert Burns, William Waldorf Astor, Euclid, Joseph F. Smith, the Mormon, Andrew Carnegie, Henry viii., and many more, all treated with fine satire and with drawings that are caricatures of true celebrities. And then the house has calendars and yearbooks and many pretty things they had in years gone by, which are as pretty and as appropriate as ever as holiday gifts. Don't forget "The Letters of Henrik Ibsen;" "The Little Kingdom of Home," by Margaret Sangster; Chaucer's "Canterbury Tales," illustrated in color by Walter Appleton Clark; or "The Star of Bethlehem," the pretty old play revived and made uniform with "Everyman," also not to be forgotten. For calendars we must refer to advertisements. A rather sad book for the holidays, but a book of such great merit that it should be bought and given to people of true appreciation is the story "An Eye for an Eye," by Clarence S. Darrow. It is the story of the last night of a condemned murderer, who tells the details of his crime and of his life to the friend who sits with him through the last night. The book is a great lesson most artistically given.

Funk & Wagnalls Company have brought out Marshall P. Wilder's "Sunny Side of the Street." The author calls it "A bright garland woven from blossoms plucked in the gardens of humor and pathos which lie side by side," a rather poetic phrase that might make the book seem to appeal more to the gentle sex and to rank with other works for quiet hours. But in reality it is a book of humorous recollections about many people Mr. Wilder has met in his continual wan-derings and he has much to say of such prominent people as Richard Croker, President McKinley, John D. Rockefeller, Patti, Sir Henry Irving, Ioe Jefferson, Mark Twain, "Buffalo Joe Jefferson, Mark Twain, "Buffalo Bill," Talmage, Horace Greeley, Ed-ward vil., "Bill Nye," Russell Sage, John Philip Sousa and many more of the celebrities of a generation that we all know. The book is most attractive in its get-up, with text illustrations by Bart Haley and cover decorations by Charles Graham. If you have among your friends a clergyman of culture, no matter what his creed or sect, he would thank you for life for the "Jewish Encyclopædia," a work the publishers may be proud to have issued; and if you count students and highschool scholars in your lists of friends, don't forget "The Standard Dictionary," which will gladden the whole household for many years to come.

GINN & COMPANY, Boston, again turn out a book by William J. Long, and many are waiting to add it to their collection of his artistic stories of nature and her work. "Northern Trails" is the first book Long has written since "A Little Brother to the Bear" was published in 1903. No doubt it will also become a little classic in its field. The readers of "Northern Trails" are brought face to face with the wild life along the coasts and in the barrens of Labrador and Newfoundland. The chapters include stories of the white wolf, fishes, salmon, wild geese, whale and polar bear. The author's extraordinary powers of observation and simplicity of style which makes the literary merit of his writing unmistakable have attracted universal attention and brought in a vivid way the world of outdoors to readers of all ages. Besides the two already mentioned there are "The School of the Woods," devoted to animals and birds; "Following the Deer," "Beasts of the Field," "Fowls of the Air," the last two making a pretty set neatly boxed together. After roaming for pleasure with Mr. Long we can also find some much stronger food provided by this house. "The Philippine Islands," by Fred W. Atkinson, first General Superintendent of Education, are descriptive, not controversial; "The Discovery and Colonization of North America," by John Fiske, includes the events from the discovery of our continent to the struggle between England and France, out of which grew the questions which led to the American Revolution; and by the same author is "How the United States Became a Nation," covering the period that began with the first administration of Washington, 1789, and ended with the downfall of the Confederacy in 1865. Very timely now that we have begun to put down fraud and lay bare the schemes of those in high places are books to teach our citizens their duties. Of such are "Trade Unionism and Labor Problems," by Prof. John R. Commons; "Trusts, Pools and Corporations," by Prof. W. Z. Ripley, treating of combination from the point of view of capital; "President Roosevelt's Railroad Policy," made up of a discussion by Charles A. Prouty, David Willcox, Peter S. Grosscup and Frank Parsons; and "The Education of Wage Earners," by Thomas Davidson, with an introductory chapter by C. M. Bakewell.

HARPER & BROTHERS are specially proud of "London Films," of which they have made a fine gift book, which has already been fully described. A group of seven exquisite love stories of the Middle Ages in France and England is called "The Line of Love." James Branch Cabell has beautifully preserved the passionate and romantic atmosphere of the time, and his pages are rich in incident and glowing with life and color. The stories purport to be taken from the annals of a noble French family, covering the period from 1350 to 1550. For this book Howard Pyle has made a frontispiece and nine full-page illustrations in color, and also marginal illustrations in tint. In point of manufacture the volume is an exceptionally beautiful example of bookmaking. Miss F. Y. Cory now outranks all Americans as a depicter of child life. The triumphs of her genius have appeared in her famous series in Harper's Bazar, entitled separately "Tragedies of Childhood," "Simple Pleasures of Childhood" and "Trials of a First Baby." A combination of thirty full-page pictures in color and of the same number of pen and ink drawings have now been made in "The Pleasant Tragedies of Childhood," and each is explained in a merry little rhyme written by Burges Johnson, whose verses of child-life are well known. While the volume cannot fail to amuse children, its appeal is to the parents of children. Justus Miles Forman ranks high among the writers of pure romance. His story, "The Island of Enchantment," tells of a great passion in the days when love came at a glance or touch and courtship was unknown, and when a young captain, knowing more of war than of women, was sent to conquer the island of Arber, and fell in love with the dark eyes of a slim girl taken as a spy by his soldiers. The climax is surprising. Howard Pyle has made four full-page illustrations in color for this book. A romance of Old New York, impregnated with the spirit of pure comedy, is "Caroline of Courtlandt Street," by Weymer Jay Mills. Rose Whitebush—one of the famous Whitebushes of Courtlandt Street quality, but forever banned because her quality, but forever banned because her mother had been an actress—hits upon a wild scheme to retrieve her fallen fortunes. She will go to Courtlandt Street, and play the part of the Honorable Caroline, her cousin of the English branch. Though her strategy has to reckon with an English lover, the actress springs to life in her and aids her quaking heart and brave spirit, and when the crisis comes on the top of calamity for the wouldbe Caroline her love is in at the pinch, and all ends well. Six illustrations in color and marginal decorations in tint, untrimmed edges and a protecting box make this a most attractive gift book. Nothing more sure to please could be given a young girl than "Her Memory Book," with drawings by Helen Hayes and page embellishments printed in sepia from this artist's drawings. The book is built on the plan of the "Baby Books." In it a record of various important and interesting events of girlhood days may be kept. Provision is made for all the ordinary social diversionsdances, luncheons, teas, festivities of all descriptions, college events, and the sports of the four seasons. The pages devoted to the girl's coming-out party contain space for the signatures of the receiving party and of the guests. In the volume may be inserted cards, invitations, samples of favorite frocks, photographs and the hundred and one things the average girl likes to treasure. There is also a new edition of Richard Le Gallienne's "An Old Country House," brought out in response to popular demand. Booth Tarkington, Gertrude Atherton and Mary E. Wilkins have written three fine novels entitled, respectively, "The Conquest of Canaan," which is a town in Indiana; "The Travelling Thirds," in which a father, mother and two daughters take their first tour abroad to see Spain, where they also fall into the hands of Puck and Cupid; and "The Debtor," in which Miss Wilkins has gone from her favorite New England to a New Jersey village, where she describes a Southerner and his family who are extravagant and always in debt, and who are for a time kept alive by the father singing and dancing negro melodies in vaudeville shows. As a result of the scientific study of wild animals C. G. Schillings, the foremost of German naturalists, has written a book called "With Flashlight and Rifle," translated and cdited by Henry Zick, and the work has striking reproductions of photographs of wild animals taken by the author at night in their native haunts in Africa. The text contains valuable information about the habits and life of these animals. Deep intellectual science on the contrary has gone into W. H. Mallock's "The Reconstruction of Religious Belief," in which the author dwells upon the necessity for finding some intellectual solution for the contradiction between science and religion, and reasons out the religion in every human soul in a variety of detailed ways. Any wideawake clergyman would give much for this book. Any one that enjoyed "The Masquer-ader" wants "The Gambler," by Katherine Cecil Thurston. She is a born story-teller, and handles the dramatic possibilities of her characters with consummate art. The scenes of "The Gambler" are chiefly Ireland and Italy, and the girl who so nearly succumbs to her passion for gambling is a young Irish

A. J. Holman & Co., Philadelphia, Bible publishers, are having a phenomenal success with their new black-face type "Teachers' Bible," which came out several months ago. The first edition was all sold some weeks before it was off the press. They attribute its popularity to the clearness of the type, the good paper and the handiness of the volume. In their description they say: "Just the right size, neither too large nor too small, light in weight, easy to read"—which seems to describe the Bible very fairly. Their new up-to-date "Helps" which have been added to this Bible also aid in popularizing it. They also publish this same Bible without "References" or "Helps" which they call a "Black Face Type Text Bible," in which form it makes an ideal school Bible. This, too, is meeting with a great sale. The demand for their "Pictorial Editheir "Pictorial Editions" is also unabated, which is doubtless due to the admirable selection of the pictures. Photographic views of places were chosen which are of interest not only to Bible scholars, but to the people at large, and hence, to use a popular phrase, their Bibles are always "in the public eye. Several years ago an illustrated work on "Egypt and the Holy Land," containing nearly 300 photographic views, came out, and this was subsequently secured by this firm, and from it they made those fine selections which made this edition of the Bible so attrac-tive. This firm was the first to bring out a "Pictorial Bible," with full descriptions and the Bible References, directly underneath the pictures, an arrangement which found immediate favor with Bible buyers. Their Twentieth Century edition of the "Family Bible," printed from the new expanded De Vinne type, is selling faster than ever this fall. It has the largest type used in any popular priced "Family Bible" and it also has the useful pronouncing feature.

with the imprint of Henry Holt & Co. has been approved by the head of the house, and all who buy a Holt novel may be sure it has interest and decided literary quality. In "The Divine Fire" May Sinclair has given a full-length study of the poetic temperament that will live. The hero poet is placed in a curiously interesting environment and is drawn with a firmness of hand that has been praised in highest terms by such fastidious and exacting critics as the Allantic Monthly, The Dial and London Punch. It is every reader's duty to speak of this book and do his best that its reputation shall spread. So good a novel must be spread abroad, and every one who has felt its noble, inspiring power should make his neighbor come under the spell of its absorbing interest and true distinction of style. JERUSALEM-THE TOWER OF DAVID.

is the romance of Dolores Delgado, the last of a royal native race of Central America and an American yachtsman, and the story covers some fighting that can hold its own with any in fiction; "The Venus of Cadiz," by Richard Fisguill, is original and humorous, a delightful comic opera novel with its Cadiz in Kentucky and a love-lorn six-footer, the proprietor of some mushroom caves, to make the unsophisticated Venus happy in the end; "The Millbank Case," by George Dyre Eldridge, is a very fine detective novel, dealing with Maine lumbering camps on the Canadian border and with the misdeeds of a group of powerful Maine politicians; "The Belted Seas," by Arthur Colton, is a South American sea yarn, telling of a ship that climbed a mountain, of the master of the earthquake, an American-Chinese monk, etc., a book remarkable for imagination, humor and pathos which recalls Stockton at his best; "The Marathon Mystery," by Burton E. Stevenson, tells an absorbing detective story of modern New York; "After the Divorce," by Grazia Deledda, narrates a powerful story of Italian life dealing with an Italian law which grants divorce to the wife whose husband has become a convict; and "The House of the Black Ring," by Fred Lewis Pattee, hinges on a striking mystery of the Pennsylvania mountains. There is a new illustrated edition of the "Williamsons' Lightning Conductor," and another humorous automobile story by the same writers called "The Princess Passes," in which a charming American girl and a susceptible Englishman travel through Northern France and Switzerland to the Italian lakes and Monte Carlo. The action is brisk and the love story most interesting, and this work of fiction has the approval of the most critical of all the papers-The Nation. If we leave the works of the imagination and come to the literature of fact good books may be chosen for friends from the list of this house. "Animal Snapshots and How Made," by Silas A. Lottridge, shows extraordinary pictures from photographs of our familiar wild animals and birds taken in the fields and woods by the author, accompanied by text telling of the habits of the raccoon, opossum, white-footed mouse, the great horned owl and all kinds of squirrels; and E. Ray Lankester has written a book on "Extinct Animals," which is in some measure the history of the earth itself, and he has provided illustrations of these animals as they must have been before written history existed. An interpretation of the methods of Shakespeare as an artist appears in "Lectures on Shakespeare," by Stopford Brooke, which is more an appreciation than an analysis of Shakespeare's best known plays. "The Negro and the Nation," by George S. Merriam, is a witty, scholarly study of the history of American slavery and enfranchisement, told with special reference to the far-reaching problems of the present day, a work characterized by thoroughness, impartiality and sanity of view which will appeal to the older men of your acquaintance who lived through the times that tried men's souls, just before and just after the Civil War. In these days when every ten people hold at least eleven opinions on Rostand, Hauptmann, Sudermann, Pinero.

Maeterlinck and Shaw, the book of Edward Everett Hale, Jr., on "Dramatists of ToDay" will be eagerly sought for. It offers an informal discussion of "Cyrano de Bergerac," "The Sunken Bell," "Magda," Candida" and other plays that are so warmly discussed in educated society and it admits a feature very often missing in the discussions of the hour in its quiet common sense. It is good news for all who now want to study Russia under authoritative teaching that they can have a new edition of "Wallace's Russia," rewritten throughout and greatly enlarged, and of it The Nation says: "A book of extreme value on a remarkably difficult subject has been rendered invaluable, nay indispensable, for those who wish clearly to understand present conditions and future possibilities in the realm of the Tsar;" and which the London Times classes with Bryce's "American Commonwealth," and says it is "impossible to praise too highly."

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY have been very happy even for them in their selection of literary material to bring out as holiday gift books. Bret Harte's typically American love story in verse, known as "Her Letter, His Letter and Her Last Letter," with its artistic designs by Arthur I. Keller, has already been fully described in our front pages. E. Boyd Smith has struck a really new vein in animal books in his "Noah's Ark," and his full-page and double-page illustrations in color, shedding quite a new light on how types, animal and human, were preserved during the alldevastating flood, are exquisitely drawn and full of genuine, all-conquering hu-mor. We have all read the story of Noah and the Ark, but few of us have stopped to picture to ourselves what actually must have happened when he tried to gather together the animals and build on land a ship to carry them. The leaders of the new theocriticisms have logical been diligent to tell us what could not have happened, but it has remained for E. Boyd Smith to show in these pictures what really did happen. As might have been expected, Noah's experiences were exasperating and funny to the last degree. He had strikes while he was building the ship, he had to overcome the disbelief of his people, and he was hopelessly put out by the difficulty of preventing the cats from catching the mice, and the dogs from chasing the cats. The dry and solemn tone of the accompanying text shows an art almost equal to the genius of the pictures. For the holiday volume of "English Hours" Henry James has collected from "Portraits of Places" and "Transatlantic Sketches" the chapters descriptive of England, and to them he has added four new papers and all have been illustrated by Joseph Pennell, who knows England as no one else, by seventy characteristic pictures. The new Christmas edition of "The One Hoss Shay," with 66 colored illustrations and decorations by Howard Pyle, is peculiarly attractive in its mechanical features. Mr. Pyle has been unusually successful in giving to many of his little head and tail pieces the character of hand-painted marginal illustrations. In an exceptionally readable narrative C. William Beebe has told the story of "Two Bird-Lovers in Mexico," telling how the ornithologist and his wife went from Vera Cruz to the Pacific and back and studied all the strange animals they met as well as the birds. Mr. Beebe is an excellent photographer, and the book is lavishly illustrated with reproductions of pictures taken during the rough trip. The book is in holiday dress, and though primarily a nature book it will interest many who will feel the attraction a volume of travel in a strange land always possesses. A holiday edition from new plates is also ready for Hawthorne's "Wonder-Book for Girls and Boys," with Walter Crane's original full-page watercolor sketches; there is a new edition of Edna Dean Proctor's "The Song of the Ancient People," the outpouring of racial and tribal feeling of the Pueblo people, which is unique in American literature; and there is a monumental and sumptuous edition of George Cavendish's "The Life and Death of Cardinal Wolsey," that wonderful biography of Henry VIII.'s great cardinal written nearly 400 years ago and still the most authoritative work on that strange, ill-fated man's career. The illustrations have been fittingly chosen, chiefly from the work of Holbein. True literary taste craves essays and could be delighted with "Ways of Nature," by John Burroughs, specially aimed against recent popular animal books that this past master of nature study has pronounced pure romance and misleading in their effects; Agnes Repplier has prepared wholly delightful personal reminiscences of herself and her intimate friend, Mrs. Elizabeth Robins Pennell, which she entitles "In Our Convent Days;" and Thomas Wentworth Higginson in "Part of a Man's Life" offers a series of literary memories and anecdotes throwing light upon the intellectual and social tendencies of which he has watched the growth through so many, many years. Every student of American history will want "James G. Blaine," by Edward Stanwood, editor of the Youth's Companion, who makes most instructive the life of this great statesman, which is virtually a history of the Civil War, of Reconstruction and of the great series of struggles over the currency in which the great Secretary of State under two presidents took so active a part; and "Louisiana," by Albert Phelps, based entirely upon original research and thorough examination of contemporary records, manuscripts, political pamphlets, newspapers, etc., which deal with this unique Commonwealth among the States of our Union. The publishers are justly proud of "The English Works of George Herbert," in three volumes, arranged, annotated and considered in relation to his life, by George Herbert Palmer, and they have also made a large paper edition in six volumes of this critically speaking final edition of Herbert's work. A novel and interesting feature in the books is the printing of the poems on the right side of the page, with the notes, etc., facing them on the left. The centenary of the birth of the great anti-slavery reformer occurs during the Christmas season, and no more welcome gift could be given to a veteran male relative than "The Words of William Lloyd Garrison," a centennial selection, 1805-1905. A brief sketch of Mr. Garrison's life and a fine photogravure portrait add to the value and interest of the book for the general reader, while the appendix, with its list of the best authentic portraits of Garrison, its bibliography of works by and about him, and its chronology of the principal events in his carrer will be especially appreciated by librarians. Among the fiction recently published by the Riverside Press are some "gents of purest ray." Kate Douglas Wiggin's "Rose o' the River" gives a background of Maine village life to the story of Rose and her shiftless grandfather, which of course is wholesome and full of humor and pathos; and Alice Brown in "Paradise" takes her characters bodily from country firesides and gives us in "Barbara," an escaped circus palmist and conjuror, one of the most charming heroines she has ever drawn, full of religious sense and genuine human appeal; Margaret Sherwood in "The Coming of the Tide" writes a fine study in heredity and the contrast of temperament between a Southern girl, strong of character, and a New England dreamer and vague philosopher, of which the scene is again the Maine coast; and a very original story is told in letters in Persis Mather's "Counsels of a Worldly Grand-mother," which is full of humor, wit and sparkle, but also full of much-needed lessons.

B. W. Hueasch, New York City, brings out "Christian Origins," by the Rev. Dr. Otto Pfleiderer, of the University of Berlin, the result of forty years of critical research, much of which has been offered in lectures and has commanded the attention of all scholars and thinkers; and "The Peril of Change," essays written in time of tranquillity, by C. F. G. Masterman, of Cambridge, England. He has provided for the Christmas season two books of interest to the music lover in "Beethoven, the Man and the Artist, as revealed in his own work," and "Mozart, the Man and the Artist, as revealed in his own work." Both books were compiled and annotated by Friedrich Kerst, a noted German musical writer, and have been translated into English with the consent of the author, and edited, with new introductions and additional notes, by Henry Edward Krehbiel, the well-known writer and critic, who has verified all the references and amplified many of the annotations by means of the rare documents in his possession. In these volumes are gathered the utterances of Beethoven and Mozart on the important events of their lives, their views of their art, estimates of other composers and opinions of their own works, religious views, etc. These are classed under such chapter head-ings as "Concerning Art," "Chips from the Workshop" and "Love and Friendship," and each quotation is followed by a statement of the source whence it is taken and the circumstances under which it was said or written. Two books that know straight where to go are "The Poetry and Philosophy of Browning" and "The Poetry and Philosophy of Tennyson," by Edward Howard Griggs, collections of lectures on the poets uniform with those on "The Divine Comedy of Dante."

HURST & COMPANY this season have a decided novelty in their Burnt Leather editions of the classics and of the poets. These include a choice selection of clasic literature adapted for presentation or keepsake purposes, each volume being bound in ooze calf with hand-painted floral and scenic designs, the titles being done by a graphic process. There are about seventy titles, including the best work of world-famous authors. As an inexpensive and handsome present these books will commend themselves to a large circle of readers. Hurst's Padded Editions of the Poets include about fifty titles, each volume being bound in embossed padded leather, with gilt edges and attractive cover designs. Hurst's Gilt Top Library edition of eminent authors is an excellent collection of the works of well-known writers in neat cloth bindings, including upwards of 250 titles. The Cambridge Classics, a collection of neat 16mo volumes, is put up in new styles, the covers being embellished with inlaid medallion portraits lithographed in eight colors. Laurelhurst series, the Half-leather Classics, the Ideal series of Standard Classics, the Devotional Classics and the Presentation series are all sixteenmos, bound in various styles, and from them may be selected the best of English standards at exceedingly low price, making good presents for every season of the year. Their Half-leather, Standard Authors is a very attractive edition, bound in library style, half leather, with gilt tops.

"JEST WAIT TILL DICK ENDICOTT'S A CAP'N."

Their Arlington series of twelvemos, in new bindings, is perhaps the lowest priced edition of standard authors bound in cloth, including 150 titles. In addition to these Hurst & Co. also publish a variety of standard works in also publish a variety of standard works in sets, dictionaries and manuals, recitation books and hand books, and Sunday-school Teachers' Reference Bibles at low prices. They also handle the famous "Peck" books, by George W. Peck, and Habberton's "Helen's Babies," elaborately illustrated. Among the very newest of the many series and styles are the Almonte Library of Popular and styles are the Almonte Library of Popular Fiction into which they have put 100 of the best-loved novels: and a series of Mirthful Books In Up-to-date Slang.

GEORGE W. JACOBS & Co. have a perfectly delightful offering for the holidays in "Shake-speare's Sweetheart" in which Sara Hawks Sterling has written the love story of William Shakespeare and Anne Hathaway in such quaint and winning style that it almost suggests the dainty comedies of the great poet. Most of the incidents are nearly enough correct historically to give one the illusion of a biography. The scheme is one of novelty and cleverness. The plot makes Ben Jonson appear in Stratford and ask Anne Hathaway to tell him her love story. This he writes out and files away in a London vault where it has only just been discovered and given to the public. The book is set within marginal decorations and has illustrations in color by Clara Elsene Peck. This is a really poetic work and will please all who love Shakespeare and true literary pleasure. Very clever books are "Phases, Mazes and Crazes of Love" and its new companion volume, "Knocks, Witty, Wise and —," both by Minna Thomas Antrim who in this has made a collection of a hundred epigrams which give knocks to most of the faults and shams of society, and lets very little escape her trained eye and pert tongue. The book is all in colors with different decorations on every page and the whole makes a jolly, rollicking book that will go straight to a man's heart and from which he can quote the year round. To the same class of friend appeals "That Reminds Me," the net book with the regular discount, which contains the pith and marrow of about 2000 stories worth telling. If any man learns these stories he will be welcome in a jolly party where he can begin each one in turn with the stercotype phrase "That Reminds Me." Many clever ways of amusing friends in the social holiday season are suggested in Mrs. Herbert B. Linscott's "Bright Ideas for Entertaining" in which each suggestion is fully explained, making the book very practical. An important series to be called the American crisis biographies is inaugurated by the John Randolph Spears's "David G. Farragut." It presents the life of the first admiral of the U. S. Navy from the time he was a backwoods boy through his many commands and battles down to the famous battle of Mobile Bay, which made him world-renowned. A fine bibliography adds value to the book.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS offers some publications from which very pleasing Christmas gifts may be selected. "Japanese for Daily Use," by E. P. Prentys, assisted by Kametoso Sasamoto, gives a convenient selection of words, sentences and items of importance for those planning a trip to Japan. "Daily Thoughts in French from French Authors," compiled by Jerome Marguerite de Bouvet, is put into pretty and neat limp leather binding. Edmund Clarence Stedman's "Complete Pocket Guide to Europe" is always a good present both for those who have seen and those who hope to see the beautiful things of the old world; "Simple Rules for Bridge," by K. N. Steele, really sheds some light on this difficult and widely popular game, and there are "Bridge Count Pads"; and "French Calendars" and many more gifts for those who study French and play games and like bretty things that show their friends know that they are not among those who "grind" but have time for culture and enjoyment.

JOHN LANE COMPANY, The Bodley Head, have The International Studio, the illustrated magazine of fine and applied art, and nothing could be better for a friend of artistic tastes than a subscription to this great art magazine. It is the aim of The International Studio to treat of every art and craft-architecture. sculpture, painting, ceramics, metal, glass, furniture, decoration, design, bookbinding, illustrating, photography, lithography, enamel, jewelry, needlework, gardening, etc. The principal writers on art are contributors to its pages. Many original illustrations, reproduced in every variety of black and white process, half-tone, line, photogravure, etc., are to be found in each number. Color plates of real value are to be ber. Color plates of real value are to be found in every issue. Very fine supplements to this magazine are also issued in wrappers and make luxurious art offerings. Among the latest of these is "Mansions of England in Other Times," by Joseph Nash; and "Art in Photography," containing select examples of the control o fine English and American work. Sets of the works of Borrow, Beaconsfield and Trollope in the New Pocket Library edition would be most suitable to present to a lover of the old style fiction that holds so exalted a place in English literature; and the new fiction on the list of the house is also selected with discrimination. Among the best novels they have issued this year are "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne," by William J. Locke, a story that bears the hall mark of genius, has a fine moral problem and a humor that is dainty and delightful; "A Child of the Shore," a romance of Cromwell by S. M. Fox; "A Prince to Order," a story of double identity by Charles Stokes Wayne; and "The Ford," by Arthur E. J. Legge. The most beautiful poems of the English language are gotten up in exquisite bindings in the various libraries on the lists of the Bodley Head. The Lover's Library has added the poems of Browning, Burns, Byron, Herrick, Shelley and Tennyson; and admission to the dainty Flowers of Parnassus has been granted to Tennyson's "Maud," Keats's "Isabella, or, the Pot of Basil," William Morris's "Defence of Guinevere." James Hogg's "Kilmeny," and Elizabeth Chapman's "A Little Child's Wreath." Any of these little classics would make a very se-would make a very select Christmas offering. In a new library called The Sacred Treasury are "The Poems of John Henry Newman;" "Divine Considerations," by John Valdesso; "The Hundred Best Poems of John and Charles Wes-ley;" and "The Spirit of Love," by William Law, and all teachers looking for Christmas gifts for their Sunday-school children of larger growth cannot go amiss in choosing from this newly-opened treasury. For friends of sporting tastes and love of domestic animals do not forget the Country Handbooks, of which the latest are devoted to the "Kennel," the "Gunroom" and the "Stable." Handbooks of Practical Gardening also make useful and accept-The house able gifts. also pays much attention to works on music, and volumes on Henry J. Wood, Sir Edward Elgar and Joseph Joachim are ready in their Living Masters of Music Series. In every department of literature this house selects the best. The advertising pages and the lists of holiday books must be studied.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COM-PANY were fortunate when they began to publish their True Biographies, every volume of the six thus far issued having taken its place among the eminently successful books. This year Cyrus Townsend Brady has written "The True Andrew Jackson," which has already been described in our front pages. A very remarkable book that will make many break the tenth commandment and will probably be bought by many who can ill afford it is "Newport, Our Social Capital," by Mrs. John King Van Rensselaer, who certainly knows every side of Newport life, and has made a special study of its history, both as a place and as a great social institution. She has prepared a record of some of the most brilliant chapters in American fashionable life, and her pages are crowded with distinguished names. The publishers bring out the Newport book in a style that will gain it admission to the costliest drawing-rooms of the great watering place. It has a frontispiece in color by Henry Hutt, many illustrations in photogravure and double-tone and from drawings by Edwards Stratton Holloway. It is printed on Arnoid's hand-made paper specially manufactured for this book, and it is bound in English buckram with design in gold. The limited edition is in full levant. "Lippincott's New Gazetteer" is an ideal Christmas offering if one can pay the price, which is truly reasonable when the vast amount of work put into this dictionary of universal geography is considered. Angelo and Louis Heilprin have done the revision. Pages of praise could say no more than just the names of these learned and conscientious scientists. Any one with a love of good poetry and the love of a good horse must welcome "Saddle and Song," an anthology of the best verse about the horse by well-known writers of the English language which has been put into a handsome book lavishly illustrated. Very much the same kind of friend will delight in "What Of It?" by Nettie Seeley Murphy, who did such clever work in "Isn't It So?" "What Of It?" is full of caustic wit, shrewd observations of men, women and life generally and humorous transpositions of popular proverbs. It is il-lustrated by Swinnerton. "Italian Days and Ways," by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton, is written in a series of letters by one of a party of three young women who travel through the less frequented Italian towns as well as the large cities, and take note of quaint customs and curious incidents by the way, and casually a charming love story is revealed in these happy and spontaneous letters, so full of literary and artistic and historic allusion; Louis Becke has in "Notes from My South Sea Log" again produced a series of capital sketches of life on shipboard and on the islands which he knows better than any other living writer; "The Old Road," by H. Belloc, is a superb volume, giving a fascinating review of the great English roads of long ago, with many illustrations and some maps; "The with many illustrations and some maps; "The Fields of France," by Mary Du Claux, give charming descriptions of the French country famous in history, especially of poet-sung Brittany, with illustrations in color by W. B. MacDougall; "Facts and Fancies About Java," are told by Augusta De Witt; "Round About Pekin," by Mrs. Archibald Little, with several hundred illustrations, is superb; and "Primitive Art in Egypt," by Jean Caport, has been translated by A. S. Griffith and furnished with 208 illustrations for the most part direct reproductions of photographs. Much information is conveyed in most attractive form in Olga Rags-ter's "Chats on Violins;" in Hilda Skae's "Life of Mary, Queen of Scots;" in Charles Morris's "The Discoverers and Explorers of America;" in C. C. Rombaugh's "F C. Bombaugh's "Facts and Fancies for the Curious;" and in "Natural History in Zoological Gardens," by Frank E. Beddard, giving an account of 117 animals admirably illustrated from accurate photographs. "An Or-chard Princess," by Ralph Henry Barbour, is worthy to take its place beside the author's "Kitty of the Roses," one of the most popular gift books of last season; and an especially beautiful edition has been made of John Luther Long's "Miss Cherry Blossom of Tôkyò," with nine fullpage illustrations in colors and tints, lining papers of cherry blossoms and every-thing gorgeously Japanese in the way of cover and orna-mental box. The French Men of Letters series, edited by Alexander Jessup, commends itself at once to literary people. It is modelled on Mor-ley's English Men of Letters series, and introduces itself with a volume on "Montaigne," by Edward Dowden; and one on "Balzac," by Ferdinand Brunetière, both model biographies by recognized authorities on their subjects. Scientific and medical works are also specialties of this house, and they have recently published some very good fiction, for details of which the advertising pages in this issue must be consulted. There are new stories by E. F. Benson and Rosa Nouchette Carey, both always sure to please all their old admirers.

LITTLE, BROWN & Co. have made a very beautiful holiday made a very beautiful nonday gift book of Lilian Whiting's "The Florence of Landor," which has already been fully described. Specially timely, in view of all the honors lately bestowed upon Paul Jones, is Costin Mohov's new peels are Captain Mahan's new work on "Sea Power in Its Relations to the War of 1812," which appears in two volumes, with photogravure front is pieces, maps, plans and twenty-three full-page plates in half-tone from original illustrations by Stanley M. Arthurs. Captain Mahan presents in a series of vivid pictures the stirring events of the war, and brings to his work the knowledge acquired in a lifetime of expert study, together with an exceptional command of government and private documents, and in such vital matters as the impressment of American seamen and privateer records he has been able to make valuable additions to the world's knowledge. The work is a contribution to American history of the very highest value. George Wharton James, the author of "In and Out of the Old Missions of California," has sought to show the conditions of the Indians before and after the Mission epoch, and has devoted special work to the architecture of the Missions, the story of the Ramona as related to the Missions, and to a pictorial account of the various figures of the saints at the Missions. The illustrations have been reproduced from photographs which were practically made expressly for the book either by the author himself or his friend, C. C. Pierce, of Los Angeles. The chapter on the origin of the Mission architecture was especially written for the work by the author's coworker on The Craftsman magazine, Miss Irene Sargent. A Christmas book that will not go begging is "Ramona," in the Pasadena edition, with photogravure portrait of Helen Hunt Jackson and full-page pictures and chapter headings by Henry Sandham, and an introduction by the late Susan Coolidge. "Two in Italy" is the title of Maud Howe's new book, and it is a worthy successor of her "Roma Beata," the pronounced ho'iday success of last season, and is equally well illustrated by John Elliott. For lovers of history most welcome gifts will be "The True Story of Paul Revere," by Charles F. Gettemy; "The Brothers' War," by John C Reed, with chapters on Webster, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Calhoun and Toombs; and "The Fight for Canada," a sketch from the history of the Great Imperial War by William Wood, president of the literary and historical society of Quebec, very handsomely issued, with portraits, maps and p'ans of battles. This house has had luck in securing good fiction this year, and if friends like novels nothing better can be found than "The Ballingtons," by Frances Squire, a study of married life in two families, in one of which the husband, in the other the wife, is the financial power; "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," a clever story by Anne Warner, author of "Susan Clegg," telling of adventures in New York City and of the pranks of Aunt Mary's nephew Jack and his chums; "The Divining Rod," a story of the oil regions by Francis N. Thorpe; "The Breath of the Gods," a story of Japan and Washington, by the ever-popular author of "Truth Dexter;" and "Justin Wingate, Ranchman," by John H. Whitson, a present-day Western story presenting the bitter struggles between the Colorado ranchmen and the farmers. Anna Payson Call's "A Man of the World," and Lilian Whiting's "The Joy That No Man Taketh from You" are full of helpful thoughts on life; just the thing to give away in the season that, above all else, teaches unselfishness and true happiness.

Longmans, Green & Company are fortunate in their holiday offerings. Their leading book of travel is "Two Years in the Antarctic," written by Lieut. Albert B. Armitage, who was second in command of the Discovery in 1001-1001 and of the Indiana Harmonian. in 1901-1904 and of the Jackson-Harmsworth polar expedition in 1894-1897. In this volume he recounts the history of the Discovery's voyage, the hardships and perils, the amusements and good fellowship of these two years near the South Pole, and the results of the expedition. Excellent illustrations and a map make very real this record of daring and piuck. More nearly within the possibilities of most of us is a trip to Spain, and for the intending traveller as well as the arm-chair Jerome Hart's "Two Argonauts in Spain," with its numerous pleasing pictures. Written in most entertaining style, it narrates the adventures of two companions in Alhambraland, the letters having been first published in the San Francisco Argonaut. "Cuba and the Intervention" brings us still nearer home. Here we have a critical, impartial account of the American intervention in Cuba and the consequent events, by Albert G. Robinson who has written after close observation and just weighing of facts. A notable addition to the year's books is William Morris's Earthly Paradise," in a fine New Edition, printed in large type and on light wove paper, with introduction by J. W. Mackail with whose "Life" of Morris this is a uniform edition. The four gilt-topped volumes may be had in a box. "American Familiar Verse (Vers de Société)" is a representative collection, selected and edited by Brander Matthews with discriminating and critical judgment. Good fiction in attractive form is always acceptable as gifts. From a long list bearing the Longmans' imprint we may mention Stanley J. Weyman's "Starvecrow Farm," a stirring romance of rural England in the early roth century, centering in an elopement. "Shakespeare's Christmas" is a delightful collection of short stories by Quiller-Couch; M. E. Francis's (Mrs. Blundell's) "Wheat" is a Dorset love-story in the author's happiest vein; and "Glenanaar," by Father Shechan, has a setting taken from Irish history at the time when the Fenian uprisings were convulsing the country. The plot hinges on the trial of an "informer" and introduces Daniel O'Connell as the advocate. For a friend of hunting tastes always combined with love of dogs W. G. Eley's "Retrievers and Retrieving" will strike the right chord. It divulges all about early training, work in the field, kennel management and observations of long experience. "My object," the author says, "has been to interest the novice, not to instruct the expert, who is able to break his retrievers without any assistance from me."

take from that class the work they desire to sell most during the holidays. "The Boss sell most during the holidays. "The Boss of Little Arcady," by Harry Leon Wilson, has already been fully described in these pages. "The Little Green Door," by Mrs. Mary E. Stone Bassett, is a romantic love story that opens in the beautiful private garden of Louis xI. The lovely heroine who is living near it, under the protection of her nurse, is permitted to enter it by the old gardener, through "the little green door." She meets the king unexpectedly in one of her visits, and not knowing who he is, loses her heart to him. He is also deeply fascinated by the charming, innocent girl, many intense scenes of love making being the result. "A Daughter of the South," by George Cary Eggleston, is a romance of the last months of the Civil War when the Mississippi was once more opened to navigation. A refugee Southern girl and a young Kentuckian buying cotton fall in love and the plot tells of lawless speculators and plundering merchants who made the most out of the United States Government and the ruined Southerners. A novel of heart and teeling with much humor and of strong general interest is "David Ransom's Watch," by Mrs. G. R. Alden, whose books are always most eagerly read. "Italy: Her People and Their Story," by Augusta Hale Gifford, is an ideal popular history for the general reader, fully illustrated; and the "Handbook of United States Political History," by Malcolm Townsend, is a book for the library table and office desk that will be as often consulted as the dictionary. Very acceptable Christmas gifts may be made of "The Joys of Friendship," compiled by Mary Attelle Ayer, editor of the "Daily Cheer Year Book," which is most dainty in appearance and contents and looks quite imposing in its de luxe edition in burnt leather binding; of "Life More Abundant," by Henry Wood, which gives scriptural truth in modern application and is a most able study of the Bible from a New Thought point of view; and of "The Only True Mother Goose," which is an exact reprint of the original edition published in Boston in 1833, for which Dr. Edward Everett Hale has prepared an introduction.

JOHN W. LUCE & COMPANY provide for those wise people that occasionally pause in the mad race and take a few hours off to enjoy themselves and see how it rests them to be "foclish" for a little. For such is "The Foolish Almanack," by Nixon Waterman, George Barr McCutcheon, W. D. Nesbit, Arthur E. Parke, Virginia Van De Water and others, containing humorous chronological data, strange weather predictions, odd points on astronomical phenomena, tides and horoscopes; absurdly funny hints on farming, health, beauty, fashion, household matters and much wisdom and foolishness not found in any other almanack, very attractively printed in two colors and liberally illustrated by Wallace Goldsmith, who has also amusingly depicted the troubles and phases of the moon. Any one who knows of the telegraph business will appreciate "All By Wire," a telegraphic explanation of a telepathic union of hearts by Frank P. Sibley, a volume of 100 telegrams which pass principally between a young man and woman who are entirely unknown to each other, but have been obliged to resort to the wire as a means of recovering their luggage, each having taken the other's by mistake in leaving a sleeping car. They are introduced by the telegrams of a happily discovered mutual friend, carry on an odd courtship, become engaged, receive her father's blessing—and all by wire, not meeting until the last telegram is exchanged. The telegrams are facsimiles of Postal Telegraph and Western Union messages, both day and night, done in the four colors required for correct reproduction.

McClure, Phillips & Co. call special attention to "I. N. R. I.," (Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews), under which title appears a prisoner's story of the Cross which has already been described fully in our front pages. When looking for fiction, remember this house has some excellent stories and the theme of most of them is American. "The Ancient Landmark," by Elizabeth Cherry Waltz, is a stirring Kentucky tale, of which the plot hinges on the fact that the heroine is forbidden by the laws of Kentucky to divorce her maniac husband; "The Work of Our Hands," by H. A. Mitchell Keays, is a powerful story of an American woman's struggle against the shams of religion and the selfishness of wealth when she has married a millionaire mill owner's son and wants use of her wealth to better the condition of his people; "The Pang Yanger," by Dr. Elma A. Travis, has its scene in the Catskill Mountains, and has a plot of great ingenuity and some very delightful pictures of the elemental people of the regions the author tells of; and "The For-tunes of the Landrays," by Vaughan Kester, is a big panoramic story of American life, almost epic in its handling, which treats of the great West and all that happened to four generations. of a family that battled with Indians, sought gold, fought in the Civil War and were affected by the "frenzied finance" of the present times. The new automobile romance called "My Friend the Chauffeur," by C. N. and A. M. Williamson, of "Lightning Conductor" fame, tells of a young Irish nobleman who finds himself stranded at Monte Carlo with an automobile on his hands. To raise money he advertises to take a select party on a tour, and gets a widow, a daughter and a niece to tour with him and a newspaper friend into Dalmatia, etc. The resulting complications are delightfully humorous and ingeniously imagined. For friends who had the privilege to live when there were homes and little red wooden school houses and open fireplaces Eugene Wood's "Back Home," with illustrations by A. B. Frost, will be a delightful book. Every one who ever had a country home will laugh and cry over these casual, almost lazy sketches of "the house that I remember." A delightfully humorous pictorial panorama of recent events and the people that have taken part in them is contained in John T. Mc-Cutcheon's hundred drawings called "The Mysterious Stranger, and Other Cartoons." The artist is cartoonist on the Chicago Tribune, and he has been called the "Mr. bune, and he has been called the "Mr. Dooley" of the pencil in public affairs. Sporting tastes are considered in "The Horse in America," by John Gilmer Speed. It gives a brief account of the progenitors of the horse, and then takes up every breed for which our country has been noted—Kentucky and Denmark saddle horses, Clay Arabians, Morgans, mules, thoroughbreds, etc. The chapters on "How to Buy a Horse," "The Stable and Its Management," "Riding and Driving," "Training Horses vs. Breaking Them," are full of first-hand knowledge every horse owner will appreciate. Mr. Speed is a practical horse breeder whose expert assistance has frequently been sought by the United States Government. If golf is the favorite sport, give "The Complete Golfer," by Harry Vardon, three times English open champion and once American open champion, who certainly knows all about golf and has the faculty of imparting his knowledge. He goes into the subject with a thoroughness that begins with the very position of the hands on the club, and overlooks no fine point in the player's progress, from the hitting of the ball to the strategy of the game. The stance for every stroke with every club is indicated and illustrated with a photograph and a diagram of foot placements and distances between the ball, head of the club and feet. The book contains also an interesting account of Mr. Vardon's own golfing experiences.

A. C. McClurg & Co. have an ideal book to present to friends that have the modern craze for gardening and out-door life. It is an idyl entitled "A Garden in Pink," telling the story of two young married lovers and their delight in making their garden. They decided that everything was to be pink; even the gardener who looked on them with amazement, for gardeners take slower than most people to new fads and fancies, was brought to change his name from John Brown to Giovanni Pincolini, lest any color but pink should be named among the plants. This pretty love story is written by Blanche Elizabeth Wade, and entering fully into the spirit of her little tale Lucy Fitch Perkins has furnished pink illustrations with their accompanying necessarily green attendants. Among suitable gift publications is "With Shelley in Italy," invaluable as a guide or reference book, edited, with introduction, by Anna Benneson McMahan, and enriched with sixty illustrations from photographs, of which there is also a Large Paper edition in bindings rich, richer, richest, as long as one's means can command. "Bishop Spalding's Year Book," compiled by Minnie R. Cowan, certainly can draw from an ever pure and inexhaustible source for its suggestive, inspiriting quotations; a second series of "Catchwords of Cheer," compiled by Sara A. Hubbard, will no doubt enjoy as great a success as her first series of cheerful thought for each day of the year; and a very handsome offering is "Christmas Bells," with verses by Mary Drummond, and illustrations in colors by Louisa Gibson Pratt. If you want to give a novel, examine "Ben Blair," by Will Lilli-bridge, a new writer, who shows vitality and originality in his stirring story of a Western cowboy, who has an appealing combination of strength and gentleness; or, "A Sword of the Old Frontier," a story of the Conspiracy of Pontiac by Randall Parrish, illustrated by F. C. Yohn; or, "The Secret of Wold Hall," by Evelyn Everett Green, who writes a most romantic story of life in a mining country and gives satisfactory solutions to all the anxietics and suspicions of a young wife. A popular introduction to the knowledge and under-standing of Japanese art may be found in Stewart Dick's "Arts and Crafts of Old Japan," which puts wonderful quantities of information in a very compact form. Lovers of travel will rejoice in "Far Eastern Impressions: Japan, Corea and China," by Ernest F. G. Hatch, with 88 illustrations from photographs; "Home Life in France," by Mrs. Betham-Edwards, illustrated from photographs; and "In the Land of the Strenuous a spirited and interesting view of America as seen through the scholarly French eyes of Abbé Felix Klein, translated for us that we may see how well a Frenchman knows what we do stand for and what we might make ourselves stand for in the great world.

WHEN YOU ARE ENGAGED.

DAVID McKay has made ready for the holidays three different editions of "Shakespeare." The Handy Stratford edition gives the complete dramatic and poetical works with life, index to characters and glossary in thirteen volumes, with the text of W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright, printed from new plates and bound in fine cloth or in coclineal fine grain leather, or seal, and boxed to match in all these shapes. The Gollancz edition is a complete reprint of the English Temple edition, with vocabulary and notes to each volume, by Israel Gollancz, and printed in the largest type possible in a handy volume set. It is in ten illustrated volumes. And then there is the Reader's edition in eight volumes, with explanatory notes by Malone, Steevens, Reed, Johnson and others, to-gether with biography and index to characters and a concordance covering 3200 familiar passages. This set is illustrated with steel engravings and also has portraits of modern actors from special photographs. Almost any favorite book may be found in a new line of books very neatly gotten up that is to be called for as *The World's Famous Litera-*ture. John R. Green's "History of the English People" is as interesting as a novel and will please any man of thought and character as much as any thing you can offer him. There are also new additions to those fine libraries of useful art books entitled The Handicraft Series, The Technical Instruction Series, and The Devotional Handbook Series.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY publish in every field of literature, the quantity of their books is staggering and the quality always of highest merit. Choice is difficult. Personal taste must decide. We can only mention which of their books would please us as Christmas gifts. F. Marion Crawford's 'Venice" with illustrations by Joseph Pennell, a handsome work in two volumes has already beeen described. "The Life and Writings of Benjamin Franklin" in ten volumes, edited by Albert H. Smyth, Philadelphia, is ready in a limited library edition of ten volumes with many portraits and other illustrations, a rich treasure for all American history students and most timely when the country is preparing for the 200th birthday of this great American. "The works of Maurice Hewlett," eleven volumes are also put into a limited edition uniform with the works of Walter Pater and Matthew Arnold. Art works of great value include "The History of American Painting," by Samuel Isham, edited by John Van Dyke, which is brought out uniform with Taft's History of American Art"; and Elson's "History of American Sculpture," with twelve full-page photogravures and 100 illustrations in the text; "Pre-Raphaelitism and the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood," by William Holman Hunt in two richly illustrated volumes uniform with "The Memorials of Burne-Jones" published last season; "Character of Renaissance Architecture," by Prof. Charles Herbert Moore, the author of "The Development of Gothic Architecture," with twelve plates in photogravure and 139 text illustrations; "A Wanderer In Holland," by E. V. Lucas with twenty illustrations in color by Herbert Marshall and thirty-four illustrations after Dutch Old Masters; and Alfred Austin's "The Garden I Love," in which the Poet Laureate's poems are set off with sixteen full-page illustrations in color by George S. Elgood. Fine art work and the finest literature of the world are combined in "English Literature: an Illustrated Record," the work of Dr. Richard Garnett and Edmund Gosse, now complete in four volumes with a superh body of illustrated material. If your friends love travel and adventure the Macmillans offer Miss Agnes Laut's "Vikings of the Pacific," richly illustrated, virtually a continuation of her "Pathfinders of the West," or, B. L. Putnam-Weale's "The Re-shaping of the Far East"; or, James Outram's "In the Heart of the Canadian Rockies," a section comparatively unknown even to sportsmen, all illustrated and of great text-interest as well. Outdoor sport and work are covered by Edwin Sandys' "Sporting Sketches"; W. S. Harwood's "New Creation in Plant Life." which gives an authoritative account of the life and work of Luther Burbank of whose success in creating new varieties of flowers, no detailed account has been published before; and "A Self-Supporting Home," in which Mrs. Saint Maur describes how she set about establishing a self-supporting home in the country without one cent of capital, trusting only to hard work directed to raising profit from the soil of her little piece of land. Much thought is now given to the problem of right living, keeping in view the best efforts of mind and body and our responsibility for the conditions of life about us in home and country. and dealing with these lines of thought are "Rational Living," by Henry C. King, President of Oberlin College, who draws his practical conclusions from modern psychology; "Jesus Christ and the Christian Character," by Prof. Francis Greenwood Peabody, of Harvard University; and Henry George, Jr. "The Menace of Privilege," which covers the whole ground of social economic conditions in America and teaches many lessons needed to correct our besetting sins of exaggeration and extravagance. For those who best like fiction the house has been generous. F. Marion Crawford has written another of his joygiving tales of modern life in modern Italy about a woman singer and calls it "Fair Margaret;" a "Miss Desmond" is a novel of society life by Marie Van Vorst, Van who did such good work in "The Woman Who Toils;" "Heart's Desire," by Emerson Hough, is a perfect love-story of a contented town, certain peculiar citizens and two fortunate lovers; and "The Fair Maid of Greystones," by Beulah Marie Dix, is a historical novel of the year 1648, and the author again tells one of her strong, vigorous tales of the Cavaliers and Roundheads. No more bewitching heroine has appeared for many days than "Yolanda: the Maid of Burgundy," described by Charles Major, who is ever welcome since he gave us "When Knighthood Was In Flower"; and "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," and who again tells a most romantic story of the days when Louis XI. ruled France and Edward IV, ruled England, and Charles the Bold made all the trouble he could think of in both those war-ridden countries. A novel for men is "The Road Builders," by Samue! Merwin, one of the joint authors of "Calumet K," and "The Short-Line War" and he again tells a railroad story of what men did and dared in opening up the Great West by means of laying tracks in most unpromising natural conditions, made worse by most dangerous intervention of human craft and jealousy. No book has provoked more discussion this year than Elizabeth Robins's "The Dark Lantern," a most original story of the psychology of love in man and woman told in masterly manner and this book also bears the Macmillan imprint.

Manzi, Joyant & Co. (Goupil & Co.) have as usual the magnificent volume of "Goupil's Paris Salon" for the current year. Issued in the same sumptious style as its predecessors, in an edition of limited numbered de luxe copies, this beautiful volume presents the most remarkable paintings and sculptures shown in the Salon exhibitions of 1905, by means of reproductions and descriptive text. There are over one hundred full-page illustrations, including several hand-finished water color facsimiles, remarque proof etchings and a tinted photogravure, while the text is written by the well known French critic Maurice Hamel, and the English translation is by Paul Villars. There are 500 copies of the French text edition, of which but 75 are reserved for America, and 150 copies of the English text edition. Two other notable art works are offered by this firm. "Marie-Caroline, Duchesse de Berry, 1816-1830," by the Vicomte de Reiset, is a new volume in Goupil's Historical series, a stately quarto with beautiful illustrations comprising 50 hand painted goupilgravures, text illustrations, head and tail pieces, and two hand-fin-ished water color facsimiles—all devoted to the courtly and sprightly figures who moved through the brilliant scenes of the French Restoration. It is issued in an edition of 130 copies on Imperial Japanese vellum paper and one of 800 copies on special hand-made vellum paper, reservations of 30 and 75 copies respectively having been made for this country. The other work is a presentation of "British Portrait Painters and Engravers of the Eighteenth Century," running from Kneller to running from Kneller to Reynolds, for which Edmund Gosse has furnished an introductory essay and biographical notes. The most famous productions of this period of British art are here shown in a remarkable series of illustrations, including reproductions direct from the original paintings and exquisite renderings of the choicest of the old mezzotints. This volume also is a limited publication, with 100 copies on imperial Japanese paper (30 copies for America), and 400 copies on vellum hand-made paper, with 100 copies for the American market.

G. & C. Merriam Company. Springfield, Mass., assert quietly each year without fear of contradiction or dispute that "Webster's International Dictionary" is the best Christmas gift on the market and if one does not already own this useful reliable, attractive, lasting, up-to-date and authoritative dictionary their claim cannot be disputed. Its 2380 pages show 5000 illustrations. It has recently oeen enlarged with 25,000 new words, a new Gazetteer, and a new Biographical Dictionary, edited by W. T. Harris, and it won the Grand Prize at the St. Louis World's Fair. The Webster is now a standard in the United States Supreme Court and in all the courts of the nation, as well as in the colleges and public schools. If a smaller book is wanted, all the words he will ever require can be presented to a student friend in "Webster's Collegiate Dictionary," the largest of the many abridgments, a book unsurpassed for convenience and steady use.

Moffat, Yard & Co. present an attractive array of holiday books, notable for their art features. The first collection ever made of Howard Chandler Christy's celebrated drawings is published as "The Christy Book," in a handsome oblong volume, finely printed and bound in white vellum with a charming "Christy girl" smiling on the cover. The drawings are a remarkable and varied assortment, representative to the full of Mr. Christy's powers. They include the famous "summer girl" series, the sympathetic portrayal of musical life, characteristic pictures of society life and dainty sentiment, the well known war drawings, and spirited sketches of frontier life. The volume is remarkable in its range of sympathy and of subject, and as an example of the work of one of the foremost American illustrators. Tom Masson, the editor of Life, is represented by an attractive volume entitled "A Corner in Women, and Other Follies," in which are gathered sketches, dialogues, verses, and dainty essays, title, it will win the heart of the holiday bookbuyer. Art lovers also will welcome the new and beautiful edition of that classic for young and old, Æsop's Fables, with an introduction by Elisabeth Luther Cary, and remarkable color illustrations by J. M. Condé, who has succeeded in a wonderful degree in all bubbling with laughter and sentiment, hiding wholesome truth under the guise of extravagant fun, and expounding every day philosophy with satirical charm. Mr. Masson's themes centre in home and love, and the daily round of work and play, and they are interpreted in a series of over sixty illustrations in line and half-tone, by such artists as Gibson, Flagg, Blashfield and Gilbert. In its binding of green and gold, with a Gibson cover design, carrying out the conceit of the imparting human characteristics to the animals he portrays; and the charming Centenary edition of Hans Christian Andersen's masterpiece, "The Ugly Duckling," daintily bound, with exquisite color illustrations and black and white drawings by M. H. Squire. A striking novel of American life by a new writer is offered in "Stork's Nest." J. Breckenridge Ellis has chosen Northern Missouri as the setting for this tale of sentiment, mystery and humor, and he has produced a book of strong dramatic quality and abiding interest. "Stork's Nest" is the house of mystery, where the brothers Stork move as chief actors in a series of absorbing and perplexing incidents, all woven into an effective plot. The Middle West again is the scene of another story in lighter vein—"The Larkins Wedding," which Alice McAlilly has invested with charming sprightliness, gayety and wholesome shrewd philosophy. Its lively plot ends in a complete and most ingenious surprise. Of great interest in a novel field is Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd's "In Vanity Fair," a brilliantly written chronicle of the making and unmaking of modern fashions, of Paris as arbiter of woman's dress, of Worth and the famous ateliers in which "style" is created, of all the channels of vanity, frivolity, social ambition and shrewdness which make up the full stream of modern fashion; a more serious contribution to the history of our own times is made in Richard Barry's ab-sorbing narrative of "Port Arthur: a Monster Heroism," giving in vivid panorama the story of that wonderful siege, with many illustrations from snapshot photographs; while literature finds representation in Henry Lane Eno's strong poetic drama of Italy, "The Baglioni." There is besides a varied array of charming colored drawings and calendars from which to choose holiday remembrance. For separate titles see the advertising pages.

THOMAS B MOSHER, Portland, Me., makes a line of books for gift purposes that he chooses personally from the world's greatest literature and then has manufactured into little booklets that show the very finest technique of up-to-date bookmaking. They are printed on Japan vellum and bound in delicately tinted paper with turn over edges or in the finest of flexible leather of the most artistic coloring. The most fastidious literary and artistic friends can be satisfied with treasures from Mosher's establishment. Look at Fiona McLeod's "The Isle of Dreams," and Sir Philip Sidney's "Astrophel and Stella" in the Old World Series; Oscar Wilde's "The Fisherman and His Soul," and Marcel Schob's "The Children's Crusade" in the Brocade Series; and "A Little Garden of Celtic Verse," and "A Little Garden of Christmas Verse" are in The Lyric Garden Series. Ask to see Mosher's publications if you want something exquisite for a friend able to appreciate it. The Mosher books are printed from type upon genuine hand-made paper; no electrotypes or machine-made deckle-edge imitations whatever being used. Every volume has its parchment wrapper and slide case, properly labelled, ready for the library shelf.

MUNN & COMPANY, New York City, have a work that has held its own for a year with the fortunate ones that can build themselves fine houses and like to know just what others have done before them in getting up fine residences and beautiful surroundings. Barr Ferree, editor of the Scientific American Building Monthly, brought together descriptions of the American houses of importance and they were published in sumptuous style under the title "American Estates and Gardens." There had before been no adequate attempt to describe and illustrate these great homes of American millionaires, but the information is desired because the whole edition of the rich book was sold out last season and a second, limited to 1000 copies, is also almost exhausted. The work is a volume of 350 pages, enriched with 275 illustrations, of which eight are in duotone printed on heavy plate paper and gorgeously bound in green, black and gold. Although the exteriors of some of the houses shown may be familiar to certain readers, few have had the privilege to visit the interiors, and therefore special attention has also been given to the reproductions of many of the sumptuous halls and rooms of people of wealth, and in no better way can be learned how the very rich people of our land live within their homes of luxury.

Thomas Nelson & Sons have Bibles of all kinds and whoever wants to make a present of a Bible should look carefully into their supply. They have just published an "American Standard Revised New Testament," in 24mo minion type, and the 24mo Sundayschool Scholar's edition, with new practical helps, especially prepared for this book, and Psalms, and in nine, with. The "Psalms" are also to be had separate in three bindings. "Selected Responsive Readings," this version, is specially prepared for church use. They also have the King James version in over four hundred styles, and have added a "Red Letter Testament" in four bindings. The Nelson's "Sunday-school Scholar's Bibles," with practical helps and a new "Bible Cottoblism" season of the Catechism," especially prepared for young people is a very attractive and useful volume. Their Prayer-Books and Hymnals are put up in a very large variety of styles and bindings and are printed on both white and Nelson's India paper. The Oblong edition is particularly attractive and convenient to carry. They have a full line of church books, such as Carter's "Freasury of Devotion," "Steps to the Altar," "Private Prayer Book," "Proper Lessons" and "Church Services." In books for altar use they have "Altar Services' and "Fald-Stool Book." Among miscella Among miscellaneons books, the New Century Library of standard authors has been augmented with a Shakespeare in six volumes, bound in red cleth and red limp leather, gilt top and gilt back. Such a dainty set of Shakespeare! So pretty to look at; so delightful to read! So specially fine to give to your dearest of all friends at Christmas! The type is long primer bold face.

THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS, (American Branch,) have now ready an entirely new series of Oxford Teachers' Bibles, with new and up-to-date helps, being a practical Bible dictionary, including index, concordance, glossary, weights, measures, coins, botany, etc., all arranged under one alphabet. These helps in one alphabet also appear in "The Oxford Sunday School Scholars' Bible," making this a very useful and practical Bible for study. Also among the triumphs of Bible making are the two new black-faced type editions of "Oxford Text, Reference and Teachers' Bibles" on fine white paper and also on the famous Oxford India papers, or printed in pearl and gotten up as a 32mo, the other in brevier as a 16mo. These books seem to solve the problem how to get large type in a handy size. There are ten editions of the Oxford Prayer Books and Hymnals, and also the recently issued Oxford Elongated Red Rubric editions. There is also a new edition of "The Altar Service," printed in great primer type on exquisitely fine paper. The house is now publishing Oxford Bijou editions of "The Four Gospels," "The Book of Psalms" (prayer-book version); "Dickens' Christmas Packs", and the "Film Torre Challe"." Books," and the "Ellen Terry Shakespeare," in forty volumes. You cannot appreciate these marvels of twentieth century printing at second hand. You must see them and handle them and stand lost in surprise and admira-tion. "The Four Gospels" in Venetian limp, round corners, red under gold edges and put up in a morocco slip case will make one of the daintiest prizes that could be given a Sunday-school scholar for a well-done year's work; and the Prayer-book version of "The Book of Psalms" would go straight to the heart of a faithful chorister. Forty of these little booklets make up the "Ellen Terry Shakespeare." What could please a true lover of Shakespeare more than always to have his favorite play in his vest pocket? And if only Dickens could have seen his immortal "Christmas" books in the five volumes that hold them in the Oxford Bijou edition! Standard Oxford editions of poetry and prose now include Browning, Burns, Byron, Milton, Scott, Shakespeare, Tennyson, Wordsworth, and "Pilgrim's Progress," with Cruikshank's illustrations. The Oxford University Press also issues Archibald Little's "The Far East," a new volume in Regions of the World series: "The Elements of Railway Economics," by W. M. Acworth; volumes 11 and 12 of the "Letters of Horace Walpole;" and "The Complete Poetical Works of Shelley," edited by Thomas Hutchinson. Beautiful editions are also forthcoming of Grimm's "Fairy Tales" and the Lambs' "Tales from Shakespeare."

L. C. PAGE & COMPANY'S holiday books are rich in artistic features. "The Bible Beautiful," Estelle Hurll's pictorial history of biblical art, is fully described in our front pages; but with this should rank the two beautiful new volumes in The Art Galleries of Europe Series, "The Art of the National Gallery (London)," by Julia DeW. Addison; and "The Art of the Venice Academy," by Mary Knight Potter. Both are treated by art critics of established reputation and graceful style, and the descriptive text is the thread upon which are strung a representative series of fine reproductions in duogravure of the masterpieces of these famous galleries. Each volume is appropriately bound and neatly boxed.

Travel lovers are richly provided for with two delightful volumes devoted to "Rambles in Normandy" and "Rambles in Brittany," by Francis Miltoun, with illustrations by Blanche McManus, who with rare harmony of pen and pencil portray the charms of those famous regions of fair France, their churches and châteaux, their peasants and gentry, and their many quaint and curious scenes and customs. The same author and artist are represented also in the Cathedral series by "The Cathedrals and Churches of the Rhine," with eighty illustrations from original drawings and a sympathetic account of the wealth of legend and story enveloping these wonderful monuments of art and architecture; while in the same series Charles Rudy, the famous art critic, treats of the "Cathedrals of Spain." In this series the art lover will find authoritative and scholarly exposition, combined with beautiful drawings, from original studies of the chief beauties and characteristics of the great cathedrals, while for would-be travellers or general reader the volumes are gift books of permanent value. "China," by Col. Charles Denby, is a new volume in the Travel Lovers' Library. Col. Denby was American minister to China from 1885 until 1898, and in his official position was able to amass a fund of unusual and intimate knowledge of Chinese character and customs, religious, political and social conditions. His book is a clear and comprehensive account of the country and its people, with supplementary chapters contributed by the late author's son, Mr. Charles Denby, who from the vantage point of his Chinese residence is able to note and explain graphically the present conditions of the empire, and the great crisis now overshadowing it. "Among French Inns," by Charles Gibson, is a delightful Little Pilgrimages volume, telling of a tour through rural France, and issued in companion form to its predecessor of last year, Miss Tozier's "Among English Inns." History, ro-mance and politics alike are mingled in a volume whose issue testifies to the great public interest in all relating to the Czar's empire. This is Alexandre Dumas's absorbing record of "Cele-brated Crimes of the Russian Court," now first translated into English by Mikael Gortshakof, and brought out in rich illustrated form. It is a thrilling chronicle of mysteries and crimes of Russian history, from the days of Ivan the Terrible to the great Revolution of 1825, imparting a vivid realization of the secrets of court life and the evils and inevitable degeneration of an absolute autocracy. Art, music and literature have representation in half a dozen other volumes. Of Mrs. Jameson's famous series on "Sacred and Legendary Art," two volumes, "Legends of the Madonna" and "Legends of the Monastic Orders," have been issued, with the third in preparation; Benvenuto Cellini's "Memoirs" may be had in a handsome edition, with limp brown leather binding; in the Music-lovers' series there are three new books—"Lohengrin," by Bernard Capes, "The Valkyries," by E. J. Penson. and "Siegfried," by Baring-Gould; while Bliss Carman's new volume of essays. "The Poetry of Life," the beautiful collected edition of his "Poems," and Richard Le Gallienne's exquisite rendering of "Odes from the Divan of Hafiz," are all full of literary charm and poetic spirit. "Red Fox," Charles G. D. Roberts' first long animal story, is a strong and moving drama of an "animal hero" from babyhood to old age, fully illustrated with remarkable drawings by Charles Livingstone Bull; fiction readers will welcome Robert N. Stephens' brilliant historical romance, The Flight of Georgiana," and Grace Mac-Gowan Cooke's vital story of labor problems, "The Grapple"; while calendars, and "little classics" in gift book form make the holiday buyer's task of selection difficult.

PILGRIM PRESS, Boston, have a new story for the holidays by William A. Knight, entitled "St. Abigail of the Pines," a tale of Old New Bedford whaling days, based on historic facts and touching the deeps of human life. Dean G. F. Peabody of Harvard who read it in manuscript says: "It is the real thing. It moves with vivacity, lucidity and pathos. The mastery of seamanship surprises and delights me." By the same author was "The Song of Our Pilgrim Guest," that poetic interpretation of the 23d psalm of which 75,000 copies have found their way into home-life and of which there are now new editions in various styles, plain cloth, leatherette and pamphfet-form. For friends among the clergy try "Sermon Briefs from the Manuscripts of Henry Ward Beecher;" "The Bible a Missionary Book," by the Rev. Dr. R. F. Horton; "Educational Evangelism" speaking of the religious discipline for youth; and the "Monday Club Sermons for 1906," by eminent Congregational preachers. There is also a new edition of the very popular "Good Cheer Calendar."

G. P. PUTNAM'S Sons always provide for every field of literature at the Christmas sea-We can only briefly put before the reader the most notable volumes in each class. In descriptive books there are Elizabeth W. Champney's "The Romance of the French Abbeys," a delightful blending of history, art and romance with two colored, nine photogravure and fifty other illustrations and ornamental headpieces; "The St. Lawrence River," by George Waldo Browne, presenting in a consecutive narrative the most important historic incidents connected with this great waterway, descriptions of its most picturesque scenery and also making delightful excursions into the legendary lore of the river, all made clear by upwards of 100 illustrations; and "Australian Life in Town and Country," by E. C. Buley; and "Philippine Life in Town and Country," by James A. Le Roy, both new volumes in Our Asiatic Neighbours. Pure literature is represented by Sainte-Beuve's "Portraits of the Eighteenth Century" translated by Katharine P. Wormeley and George Burnham Lyes: "A Literary History of the lated by Katharine P. Wormeley and George Burnham Ives; "A Literary History of the English People From the Earliest Times to the Present Day," by J. J. Jusserand Ambassador from France to the United States; French Classics for English Readers, addied by Adelpha Cohn in which "Rabelais" edited by Adolphe Cohn, in which "Rabelais" and "Montaigne" are now presented; "Proverbs and Phrases of All Ages," classified by subjects and arranged alphabetically by Robert Christy in a new edition; and in the Ariel Booklists to which thirty-seven new volumes have been added; and the Vest Pocket Series which has added seven little classics of the world's literature. Specially desirable gifts in this line are "Talks in a Library With Laurence Hutton," recorded by Mrs. Isabel Moore, a most spontaneous record of Hutton's opinions on his clearly loved books, illustrated with sixty-five pictures of the interesting possessions of Hutton and of his friends and visitors; and "The Companionship of Books and other Papers," by Frederic Rowland Marvin, full of reminiscences of interesting people and of ideas suggested by wide reading. Historical tastes can be satisfied with "American Political History 1763-1876," by Alexander Johnston, edited and supplemented by James Albert Woodburn of Indiana University; and "History and Civil War in the United States: 1861-1865," by

W. Birkbeck Wood and Colonel Edwards; an authorized English version of Arvède Barine's "Louis xiv. and La Grande Mademoiselle" will be received with avidity. All French history is interesting, but there are few of its pages more fascinating than the kaleidoscopic career of La Grande Mademoiselle. She was related to Louis xiii., by both father and mother; she was the richest heiress in France; she aspired to be an empress, a nun, a political power. Her memoirs gave unique and valuable pictures of life at the Court of Anne of Austria, and of the wars of the Fronde, in which she played a manly part. The history of Europe for the last thirty years is perhaps for the first time definitely focussed in Gabriel Hanotaux' "Contemporary France" of which two volumes are ready, covering from 1870 to 1878. The volumes cover certain periods completely and are sold separately. E. P. Schuckburgh's "Story of Greece" covering from earliest times to A. D. 14 is ready in the Story of the Nations. Biography will be enriched with "The Life of Goethe," by Albert Bielschowsky, acknowledged the foremost authority of recent times. The leading German papers are unanimous in declaring it to be the most important life of Goethe, from the standpoint of scholarship, sympathetic interpretation, and literary art—in fact, the most important biography of any man written in German for many years. It is generally conceded by scholars that we now have for the first time a thoroughly reliable and satisfactory life of Goethe. The translation by William A. Cooper of Leland Stanford University is pronounced a very fine one. Who will not welcome "The Life of Charles Lamb" in two volumes, by E. V. Lucas, who did such excellent editorial work in "The Works and Letters of Charles and Mary Lamb"; or "The Life of Kate Greenaway," by M. H. Spielmann and G. F. Layard, who show the woman generally only thought of as the maker of pretty pictures of children and for children as among the best artists and critics of Europe, considered one of the artistic geniuses of the 19th century, who came in contact with all the leading figures of art and literature of the rich Victorian era; or "Mohammed," by D. S. Margoliouth, Professor of Arabic at Oxford, the latest volume in the Heroes of the Nations series. Religion and theology, science and economics are all represented by important books, for which our lists and advertising pages must be consulted. Some of your friends like novels better than all other reading. When buying for them look at "Peter and Alexis," by Dmitri Merejkowski, the third in the great trilogy known as "The the third in the great trilogy known as "The Christ and the Anti-Christ," of which "The Death of the Gods" and "The Romance of Leonardo da Vinci are already published; or, "At the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern," the story of the adventures of a New York newspaper man, by Myrtle Reed; or, "Our Best Society," so good a satire on present conditions and so outspoken that the author thinks best to remain unnamed; or, "Lady Bobs and Her Brother, and I," a tales of the Azores, by Jean Chamberlin; or, "Love Alone Is Lord," in which F. Frankford Moore veils the story of Lord Byron; or others to be found in the lists elsewhere. William H. Drummond's "The Voyageur, and Other Poems," in the Canadian dialect he has used in such fascinating manner, is ready in two editions, one with sixteen full-page photogravures and ornamental head pieces, the other in a more simple Popular edition.

The Reilly & Britton Co., Chicago, have two novelties that can be used to advantage for presentation purposes. "The Washee-Washee Laundry List," a "shape-book," designed and planned by W. M. Rhoads, is cut out with a die on the outline of a Chinaman and contains scores of maxims, quibs and aphorisms and weekly laundry lists for a year, printed on fire-cracker-red paper with covers in gay colors and silk cord hangers strung with genuine Chinese coins. Especially for women is "Recipes: My Friends' and My Own," an-attractively made book arranged for the preservation of recipes which all women collect. The book has sixteen illustrations, is printed on fine paper and done up in art binding with ribbon-marker and handsomely boxed.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY have among this season's books some excellent books to present to people who believe in home and children. Such will delight in them, and others who do not yet know this wholesome truth may be awakened by the same books. Coulson Kernahan has written a story for thoughtful women and men in "A World Without a Child" which will attract much attention. He is daring, for he has had the courage to put in vivid language the logical outcome of race suicide; "When Joy Begins," by Clara E. Laughlin, a study of a woman's life, is a charming sequel both in point of story and period of life to "The Evolution of a Girl's Ideal;" "A Mother's Year," a collection of poems and paragraphs inspired by the universal human emotion expressed in "A Wife!" "A Mother!" and of which the sentiments are drawn from President Roosevelt, Lowell, Dickens, Bryant, Holmes, Whittier, Riley and others of like feeling; and "The Rock-a-Bye feeling; and "The Rock-a-Bye Book," charming poems of child-hood by a famous lover of children. A right attitude towards life is also put with vigor and literary finish in William George Jordan's "Self Control; Its Kingship and Majesty," under which title are now brought together in a pretty book the robust essays of the cosmopolitan mind that edits The Searchlight; "Paths by the River," by Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, to whom Professor Wilkinson has assigned a place with Beecher, Brooks and Spurgeon; and "Young Men Who Over-came," by Robert E. Speer, a set of fifteen condensed biographies exhibiting the power and beauty of Christian principle in strong and active natures who made their mark in what they undertook—athletics, scholarship, business and Christian missions. A book sure of apprecia-"Makers of English Fiction," by W. J. Dawson, who knows his subject thoroughly and possesses a memory like Macaulay's for the thoughts he has had about books and authors. And good fiction also is on hand in Norman Duncan's "The Mother," a novelette of New York life and of a young widow's struggles with misfortune; "St. Cuthbert's," a parish romance by Robert E. Knowles. who tells of the primitive folk among whom he worked in his American parish; "The Village Artist." by Adeline M. Teskey, who tells of a home-loving woman who makes her neighbors see the bright and pleasing in their commonplace lives; and James M. Ludlow, the author of that great success, "The Captain of the Janizaries, written another historical novel laid in the thirteenth century, entitled "Sir Raoul," which tells of the great crusade of that time and the capture of the city of Constantinople. A work that will make the Christian world think is Charles Cuthbert Hall's "The Universal Elements of Christian Religion," and it would be appreciated by every thinking clergyman no matter what his denomination; and "Rosa's Quest," by Anna Porter Wright, goes straight to the heart of old or young who read how Rosa found "the beautiful land."

William Eleroy Curtis, who knows the Far East so well, has written a book on "Modern India" and one on "Egypt. Burma and British Malaysia," in which he gives his fascinating pictures of life, men and affairs in out-of-theway places, and moreover he tells one just the things most worth knowing about everywhere he goes, whether it is scenery, politics, business or religion. Two books more must not be forgotten, "Dr. Grenfell's Parish," by Norman Duncan, who describes life among the deep sea fishermen off the coast of Labrador; and "The Harvest of the Sea," in which Dr. Grenfell himself tells tales of North Sea fishermen, their deeds of courage, their temptations and their pastimes.

SAALFIELD PUBLISHING Co. have a gift book of unusual attractiveness in Adah Louise Sutton's volume of love poems, "Sweeter Still Than This." The illustrations are full-page drawings by Carl Williamson, and each page is decorated with daintily tinted borders, while in binding and printing nothing has been spared to ensure artistic results. Another charming holiday volume is "A Chronicle of Christmas," in which Jeannette Grace Watson tells with skill and sympathy of Christmas legends and old-time customs of merrymaking and good cheer, every page of text being set in pretty colored borders; while an immense circle of friends and admirers will welcome the handsome Joseph Jefferson souvenir volume, "Immortality," in which is presented the touching poem on eternal life written by the great actor just before his death, and beautifully illustrated by H. H. Bennett. There are three new books for the novel reader, each overflowing with plot and adventure. Headon Hill's "Millions of Mischief" is a stirring tale of mystery, hairbreadth escape and dramatic adventure; "Dolly, Daughter of New England," is the romance of a feminine soldier of fortune, told with abounding spirit by Ruth L. Sheldon; in "The Silver Pin" Alfred Wilson-Barrett unravels a murder mystery from one slight clue through a devious labyrinth of perplexity; while St. George Rathbone's books, known to all who find enjoyment in novels of plot and action, hold their place with all newcomers in the field. William Eleroy Curtis has a notable volume, devoted to "Denmark, Norway and Sweden," of particular interest in view of the recent dissolution of union between the two latter countries, and of permanent value in its clear-cut descriptions and graphic glimpses of historical and social conditions; and Frank Abial Flower has made a welcome contribution to American history in his "Edwin Mc-Masters Stanton," the biography of the great statesman who played so noble a part in the later history of the Union.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS are not at all behind other years in their lavish provision for the Christmas-trade. The place of honor in their list is given properly to the President of the United States, but his book on "Outdoor Pastimes of an American Hunter" has already had full description; as has also Ernest Thompson Seton's book on "Animal Heroes." Charles Dana Gibson always furnishes one of the most eagerly sought holiday volumes of the year. This year he calls it "Our Neighbors" and it includes his best work for the year and also a number of hitherto unpublished drawings full of the sentiment, satire and humor that characterize the most popular American illustrator. A very prettily made book, with text by F. Hopkinson Smith, and eight illustrations by Alonzo Kimble, is entitled "The Wood Fire in No. 3." The painter MacWhirter, who had moved into an old art studio building, could not live without a wood-fire, so his intimate friend arranged one for him, and around it gathered night by night the congenial spirits of the building and they grew confidential and told many of their secrets and MacWhirter told of the "Girl of the Steamer Chair." The true Christmas spirit caught from his old Dutch ancestors keeps young in Henry Van Dyke, and a col-lection of his stories and essays that have gone to so many hearts are now put into covers and called "The Spirit of Christmas," making a pretty little book with fitting frontispiece. No more perfect interpretation of Stevenson's "A Child's Garden of Verses" could be imagined than has been given them by Jessie Willcox Smith in drawings as beautiful and satisfying as those made by Maxfield Parrish for Eugene Field's "Poems of Childhood," and the publishers have made the two volumes of the same general appearance. Among the very important illustrated books stands "A History of Egypt," by James Henry Breasted, Professor of Egyptology and Semitic languages, who covers the subject from the earliest times to the conquest of the Persians and bases his work entirely upon original research. Thrilling adventures with original research. Infilling adventures with the big game of the Far East are the salient features of Caspar Whitney's book of travel and observation which he calls "Jungle Trails and Jungle People." Nearly all the illustrations are from photographs taken by the author and in themselves fill a unique pictorial record of a novel enterprise. Carolyn Wells, who is a master of compilation, has glanced through the world's satire from Aristophanes and Horace to the present time and has chosen with rare discrimination "A Satire Anthology" ranging from the bitterest to the gayest and making a thoroughly representative showing of the best work that has been done is this wide department of literature. A wery valuable work is the story of the most remarkable and successful of Antarctic expeditions entitled "The Voyage of the Discovery," and written by the captain of the Discovery, Robert H. Scott of the Royal Navy. Two years were spent below the Antarctic Circle war investigation. arctic Circle, many important discoveries were made in geographical, botanical and other sciences and a new Farthest South record made. The agreeable and informal way in which the most interesting discoveries and dangerous adventures are described in those two great volumes, and the wonderful accounts of the new lands, mountains and glaciers seen for the first time, make this book a very valuable and entertaining one. Just now all the novel reading world is discussing a Scribner book—Mrs. Edith Wharton's "The House of Mirth." This work of fiction pictures with great vividness the social conditions of New York society to-day. "A Thief in the Night," by E. W. Hornung, gives further episodes in the career of A. J. Raffles who has already made himself so interesting in "The Amateur Cracksman" and in "Raffles." The celebrated cricketer and cracksman and his faithful Bunny again rival, if they do not surpass in ingenuity, audacity and humor their earlier experiences in the older books. "The Deep Sea's Toll," by James B. Connolly, illustrated by W. J. Aylward and H. Reuterdahl tells of the lives of Glove.

edy of the lives of Gloucester fishermen, of their pluck and their daring, their sorrows and their pleasures, and he tells of these facts of which he knows more than any other man to-day with the vigor and the breeziness that brought such success for "The Seiners," and "Out of Gloucester." For lovers of short stories there are "McAllister and His Double," by Arthur Train, with illustrations by F. C. Yohn, in which the matter is taken from personal observation of the criminal side of New York life by the author, who is Assistant District Attorney of New York City; "Mrs. Radigan," by Nelson Lloyd, is composed of a series of-sketches describ-ing the career of "a climb-er;" and James Huneker, the eminent literary and art critic, has written a set of stories which he calls "Visionaries," a book in key with all the advanced movements of art and literature, "occult and pagan, mystical and Goth-ic."

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS' IMPORTATIONS.—Fine art works are generally the leading books imported by the Scribners, and all who understand music, painting, sculpture, architecture and design will find rich treasures again with the Scribner imprint. "The History of Ancient Pottery: Greek, Etruscan, Roman," by H. B. Walters, is in two volumes, based on the work of Samuel Birch, and furnishes an authoritative and exhaustive work with 300 illustrations, including eight colored plates. It is good news that there is a smaller and much cheaper edition of Sir Walter Armstrong's "Sir Joshua Reynolds" and that there is a work on "The Royal Academy and Its Members," a history covering from 1768 to 1830, written by the late J. E. Hodgson, and F. A. Eaton, Secretary of the Academy, and full of portraits and illustrations. To the Library of Art have been added "Pisanello." by G. F./Hill; and "Constable." by M. S. Henderson; to the Famous Art Cities is added "Florence." by Adolf Philippi, translated from the German by P. G. Konody and beautified and explained by 170 illustrations; a fitting book to take its place with those already published: "Pompeii," "Venice," and "Nuremberg"; and the new volumes in the Langham series are "Jean François Millet," by Richard Muther; "Rome As an Art City," by Albert Zacher; "Italian Architecture," by J. Wood Brown; and "The Eighteenth Century in English Caricature," by Selwyn Brinton; a new series is called Drawings by Great Masters; in it the drawings will be reproduced on a page 1134 x 8½ inches, and each volume will contain forty-eight reproductions, many of them printed in tints. Six volumes are ready: "Burne-Jones," by T. Martin-Wood; "Albrecht Dürer," by Dr. Hans Singer; "J. M. Swan, R.A.," by A. M. Baldry, who also writes "Holbein;" "Dante Gabriel Rossetti," by T. Martin-Wood; and "Sir E. J. Pointer," by Malcolm Bell. "Pictures In Umbria," by Katherine S. Macquoid, has fifty original illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid, and "The Gardens of Italy" are a series of illustrations from photographs by Charles Latham in two volumes, with descriptive text by E. March Phillips. "The Story of the Harp," by W. H. Gratton Flood, is the new volume in the Music Story Scries; and there is a fine historical study in two volumes of Julian the Apostate, in which Gaetano Negri has given an impartial and exhaustive judgment of the great imperial apostate. The Duchess Litta Visconti Arlse has translated the work and Prof. Pasquale Villari has furnished the introduction. New colored books show fine work and the matter chosen for them is full of interest both literary and artistic. Lamb's "Tales From Shakespeare" has 20 plates by Norman M. Price; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" has 30 plates by Byam Shaw; "In and Around Venice," by Horatio F. Brown, has fifteen illustrations; and other works include "The Confessions of Lord Byron"; "Mary Queen of Scots," by A. H. Millar; George Gissing's "By the Ionian Sea"; "Carnations and Pinks"; and "The Crown of Pine," a story of Corinth and its games, by A. J. Church, with eight illustrations. Lovers of sport must look in the "Country Life" Library of Sport for "Big Game Shooting," a fine work in two volumes with many illustrations, and a perfect manual of instruction for the golfer may be found in "Golf Faults Illustrated," by G. W. Beldam and J. H. Taylor.

SMALL, MAYNARD & COMPANY, Boston, have made ready several books that if given with judgment to the right person will give enduring pleasure to the receiver. Alvan Sanborn, late special Paris correspondent of the Boston Transcript, is well-known as a sympathetic and intelligent student of modern social conditions. In "Paris and the Social Revolution" Mr. Sanborn offers a study of the revolutionary element in the various classes of Parisian life from the anarchist laborer to the leading writers and artists of France, many of whom while in no way classified as socialist or anarchist, are just as truly revolutionary in spirit. The remarkable drawings by Mr. Vaughn Trowbridge, who accompanied Mr. Sanborn during his journeys of observation in the preparation of the book, are so closely related to the text that the interest of both is greatly enhanced. Together author and artist have produced a work as true to real life as a Verestchagin painting. The publication of the initial volume of Mr. Traubel's diary of Walt Whitman's conversa-tions entitled "With Walt Whitman in Camden" is one of the most important events in the literary history of America, and one which should attract wide-spread interest, not only among Whitman students, but among all classes of readers. For nineteen years Mr. Traubel was most intimately associated with Walt Whitman in Camden. During the greater part of this period he saw the poet daily, often several times a day. In 1888 he began to record, consecutively 'and faithfully, the conversations and events of each meeting, whatever the subject-matter, whether important or seemingly trivial; and this diary record was continued until the poet's death in 1892. The work contains a wealth of letters, bits of manuscript, and other documents, both by Whitman himself and very many of the greatest of his contemporaries. In its entirety this diary will extend to several volumes, but each will be complete in itself and sold separately if desired. Other important contributions to biography are "Josiah Warren," by William Bailie, a fine sociological study of the first American anarchist; and "John Fiske," by Thomas Sargeant Perry, the new volume in the Beacon biographies. A very important contribution to the science of government is "Colonial Administration in the Far East," in which Alleyne Ireland, the foremost English authority on comparative colonization, covers exhaustively the fields of British, French, Dutch and American government in the tropical regions of the Far East. The countries to be Studied in this great work are Burma, Hong Kong, British North Borneo, Sarawak, the Federated Malay States, the Straits Settlements, French Indo-China, Java, and the Philippines. It will extend to ten or twelve volumes, of which the first is ready this season. A representative collection of prose extracts, radical, but constructive, treating of the economic situation of the day, is by Horace Traubel and entitled "Chants Communal." This dispassionate, broad-minded presentation of true socialism should be widespread. It is optimistic and more in the nature of heart to heart talks with those who desire to learn and to know. An appeal for fair treatment of the subject of the authorship of Shakespeare is made in Isaac Hull Platt's "Bacon Cryptograms in Shakespeare and Other Studies" which fully explains and elucidates the vexed question as it stands to-day; and poetry is supplied for holiday gifts in "The Fleeng Nymph and, Other Verse," by Lloyd Mifflin; "The Lover's Rubaiyat," edited by Jessie B. Rittenhouse; "The Norse Nightingale," being the lyrics of a "Lumberyack," by William F. Kirk; "The Rosary in Rhyme," by John B. Tabb; and a new edition of Bliss Carman's "Low-Tide on Grand Pre" with which are bound "The Ballads of Lost Haven." Very good novels are Nathaniel C. Fowler's "Gumption: the Progressions of Newson New," a story of newspaper life and Yankee push and energy; and James North Wright's "Where Copper Was King," a tale of the mining interests of Lake Superior. And if anusement pure and simple is sought for, do not overlook a new Library edition of "Mr. Dooley: In Peace, In War, and In the Hearts of His Countrymen"; and "Figure Skating," by George H. Browne, with 600 diagrams and illustrations and suggestions for 10,000 figures.

STITT PUBLISHING Co., New York City, have some books that are sure to please. "The Kindred of the Wild," a book of animal life, by Charles G. D. Roberts, is a book full of delight with 50 full-page illustrations, by Charles Livingston Bull, which are faithful and graphic and tell their own story of the wild life, illuminating and worthily supplementing the pen pictures of the author. "Abroad With the Jimmies," by Lilian Bell, a clever novel full to the brim of adventure and amusement; and "The Motor Pirate," by G. Sidney Paternoster which has a triple interest—romance, detection and crime, making ingenious use of the latest and newest fashionable method of rapid locomotion. Fiction is always enjoyed by average minds and if you do not know your friend's special tastes it is always safe to give a bright novel of love's troubles and pleasures.

Frederick A. Stokes Co., among their many and varied holiday publications, have a group of books that will delight the sportsman and charm all lovers of nature. "The Basses, charm all lovers of nature. "The Basses, Freshwater and Marine," is a beautiful vol-ume, similar in style and treatment to "The Brook Trout," published several years ago. Like its predecessor, it is written by William Harris and other authoritative contributors, and is edited and illustrated by Louis Rhead, the well-known artist-sportsman. Tarleton H. Bean has furnished an introduction. The work is an exhaustive treatise upon this gamiest of all game fishes. Nelson Clute has supplemented his previous work on American ferns with a hand-some volume on "The Fern Allies of North America," describing the allied forms of plant life not included in the fern families in its scientific accuracy, its interest, and its comprehensiveness. This, like its predecessor, will be welcomed as a standard work in its field. It is illustrated with colored plates and nearly two hundred other illustrations, drawn directly from the living plants by Ida Martin Clute. Arthur H. Beavan's two books, "Ani-mals I Have Known" and "Birds I Have Known," are also notable additions to natureliterature, presenting the experiences of a trained and sympathetic observer with many delightful illustrations. The splendid voldelightful illustrations. The splendid vol-umes by N. Hudson Moore on old china and old furniture have been augmented by another work from the same author, dealing this time with "Old Pewter, Brass, Copper and Sheffield Plate." Besides this lovers of antiques will welcome "Chats on Old Furniture," by Arthur Hayden, the well-known expert, whose new volume is an indispensable practical guide for collectors, richly illustrated and remarkably comprehensive. In the literature of travel there is nothing more adventurous and absorbing than the chronicles of exploration, as is proved by H. R. Mill's new book, "The Siege of the South Pole." This gives what otherwise is to be found only in scattered and cumbersome reports, an account of the many intrepid efforts made to explore "the bottom of the world" and discover the South Pole. It is illustrated with many half-tones and a colored map. In literature that veteran man of letters, Edmund Gosse, is represented by a scholarly exposition of "Modern English Literature," illustrated with many fine photogravure portraits; autobiography of the most fascinating kind is supplied in "The Memoirs of Rose Eytinge," giving the reminiscences and experiences of an actress famous in her day on the American stage, and a friend and associate of the most interesting figures of the dramatic, musical and literary worlds; while for the art lover there is a sumptuous volume devoted to "Women Painters of the World," edited by Walter Shaw Sparrow, presenting the most characteristic work of women artists from the days of Caterina Vigri in the fifteenth century to Rosa Bonheur and our own times; and three charming little parchiment booklets in The Painters series, presenting respectively the work and most famous pictures of Rubens, Van Dyck and Rembrandt. Novel readers have been remembered in several new books of high quality. Anthony Hope's latest story, "A Servant of the Public," is a skilful and absorbing study of the private life, temperament and emotions of a famous actress, revealing not only the nature of the artist but the soul of the woman, and remarkable in its psychologic insight and brilliancy of touch. "The Speculations of John Steele" is an absorbing tale of business adventure, plot and mystery by Robert Barr, centering in a tense mystery by Robert Barr, centering in a tense struggle with "the greatest money power in the world;" Agnes and Egerton Castle have a charming new romance of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," called "The Heart of Lady Anne," full of the spirit of old-time English comedy and beautifully illustrated in color by Ethel Franklin Betts; while Robert Hichens has followed his glowing romance, "The Garden of Allah," with a volume of striking short stories, entitled "The Black Spaniel," touching upon problems of psychological manifestation with grim power and intense realism. Lillie Hamilton French has a little volume of bright and wholesome thoughts for daily living, called "The Joy of Life;" in "Ideals for Girls" Mrs. Frank Learned, better known perhaps as "Priscilla Wakefield," talks simply and sweetly to girls and their mothers upon the things that count for most in life and in woman's experiences; while the very spirit of Christmas lore will be found in Henry Van Dyke's beautiful and reverent study of "The Childhood of Jesus Christ," now appropriately issued in a dainty gift edition, with many illustrations, as well as in the familiar and attractive Masterpiece series. THOMPSON & THOMAS, Chicago, have several publications that can be used for gifts, and if selected with judgment for the right friend they will give a great deal of pleasure. Any travelling salesman will find "Tales of the Road," by Charles N. Crewdson, with sixteen drawings by J. J. Gould, full of the horsesense of salesmanship and as good a business Hustle," by J. P. Johnston. Friends of artistic tastes will be pleased by "Painting Pastimes," by Edith O'Donnell, a high-grade painting and drawing book, with verses by Girard Chapman; "The Visitor's Sketch Book," by Frances Carruthers, a decided novelty made up of sketches of animals for each day of the month, and every visitor is ex-tool in attractive shape as can be put in the hands of any man or woman on the road. It is full of points as a porcupine, and in its full morocco dress is a very sightly Christmas offering, already in its third edition. If you have friends of Christian Science leanings give them "Merciful Unto Me, a Sinner," the story of a young girl's life in a city as told by herself, where after many dark hours she felt herself redeemed by the doctrines of Christian Science. Amusement pure and simple will be found in "An American in New York," by Opie Read, already in its second large edition; "Peck's Bad Boy Abroad," of which the fourth edition is ready for the holidays; and the second edition of "How to pected to draw the animal corresponding to the date of the call; and by the same arranger "The Twentieth Century Cook Book," with menus for all seasons, and sections for chafing-dish cookery and food for the sick.

HERBERT B. TURNER & Co.'s imprint on a novel always means a story of interest and originality written in excellent English. "Sir Galahad of New France," by William Henry Johnson, has for its background the attempts of the French Huguenots to settle in Florida, in which the author, who is professionally a historian, vividly portrays the contrast between troubled France and the Acadian simplicity of the American primeval forest.

"Back to Arcady" is a pastoral love story in which Frank Waller Allen has almost a touch of Ik Marvel and George William Curtis; "Broke of Covenden" is a literary masterpiece by J. C. Snaith, telling an inimitable story of an impoverished English family and their matrimonial mistakes; "The Storm of London," by F. Dickberry, takes its idea from "Sartor Resartus," but tells an up-to-date story of social and political life in London when the people all find themselves "naked and not ashamed" when they have become accustomed to it, and in spite of the audacious subject keeps thoroughly within, good taste and points its moral; "The Hundredth Acre," a detective story of John Camden, written by a very competent hand, tells its ingenious story of mystery in a manner to puzzle to the end the most expert novel reader; and "The House of Merrilees," by Archibald Marshall, is also a story of mystery and fine detective work with well-drawn and finely contrasted characters. The house has a new limp leather Stevenson, with photogravure frontispieces of Stevenson portraits which is pretty and reasonable. A very fine work for those interested in psychic investigation is "Science and a Future Life," by Prof. James H. Hyslop, which treats of the scientific investigation of psychic phenomena and asks proof that man survives bodily death.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have gotten ready some very fine art works for the holidays. A very important publication which has been in course of preparation for the past two years is "The National Gallery (London)," and it embodies an immense amount of labor and care. The text by Gustave Geffroy, the well known art savant, is sufficient guarantee that this portion of the work is worthy of the fullest confidence; the opinion has been freely expressed by critics that few experts would be so competent to deal with his great subject and that no one man among them could bring more independent knowledge to bear upon it. The illustrations which consist of 57 full-page plates in photogravure and 155 smaller half-tone illustrations interspersed in the text, have been produced with every possible care. The volume, handsomely bound in white vellum, makes a Christmas present to make an artist hunger and thirst. Nobody can hope to have all the Newnes Art Library, but any one volume is a generous gift. The new volumes for the year included "Dante Gabriel Rossetti" judged by Ernest Radford; "Puvis de Chavannes," by Arsène Alexandre; "The Early Work of Titian," and "Filippino Lippi," each with 64 reproductions in half-tone and photogravure frontispieces. A treasure for lovers of the old books that are books is a set of three volumes of "The Essays of Samuel Taylor Coleridge" divided and separately titled "Aids to Reflection," "Table Talk," and "Shakespeare and the Elizabethan Dramatists"; or, a choice reprint of "The Lovendation of The Lovendation "The Legends of King Arthur and His Knights," compiled and arranged by Sir James Knowles. For fiction devourers there are "The Conquering Will," a romantic story of a young artist who receives a commission to paint a portrait, falls in love with his model and is nearly driven to suicide by the Calvinistic sister of his love; and "Pioneers," an exceptionally powerful novel dealing with the present struggle for freedom in Russia.

A. Wessels Company have a very fine gift book in "The Hundred Best Pictures," a collection of the most celebrated paintings in the art galleries of France, Italy, Holland, Spain, Germany and America, reproduced according to the highest art of modern photogravure by which the texture of the canvas and the brush-marks of the painter can be plainly seen and the brilliancy of a picture and its most subtle gradations of tone can be faithfully reproduced. In size these pictures are 151/2 x 111/2 inches, a truly wonderful to an artist friend, or to some offering town library. Another exquisite gift is the new edition of "Barbizon Days" in which Charles Sprague Smith gives his descriptions of Millet, Corot, Rousseau and Barye, illustrated with forty-two pictures and four photogravures, a book that breathes the atmosphere of Barbizon; and there is also a holiday edition of "Christmas Carols, Ancient and Modern," edited by Joshua Sylvestre, with pictures of the Madonna and text decorations by Theodore Brown Hapgood, who holds an honored place among the leading designers of the day. Very interesting to those now so eagerly watching Russian conditions would be "Contrite Hearts," by Herman Bernstein, consisting of stories of Jewish life which have been honored with the praise of Zangwill, Nordan and other experts on Jewish life. Threcalendars are also ready for grown people.

W. A. Wilde Co. give their chief strength to books for young people, but always have one or two books of a high grade of interest for the young people's parents. "Hector, My Dog: His Autobiography," tells a wonderful story of life in the Northland, with the secrets, dangers and beauties of which the author, Egerton R. Young, is so familiar from his long years of romantic adventure in semi-arctic regions. The dog tells of the intimate association with his master and of many perils in the wanderings through the snow and ice. "Camp-Fires on the Scioto," by Charles S. Wood, also tells a thrilling story of the courage and hardships of the winners of the West in opening up the great Northwestern territory. As always a fitting gift for any Sunday-school teacher will be found in the "International Sunday School Lessons for 1906," by Peloubet and Wells, which in spite of all new comers hold their own among those who know. Rev. Dr. Peloubet's co-worker, Amos R. Wells, has also an important book on "Sunday School Problems," which he solves practically for teachers and officers.

The John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia, have a wonderfully timely new volume for their magnificently illustrated Photogravure Series this year. The eyes of all the world are on the Slavonic Empire, and her history is ready in Théophile Gautier's "Russia." Populated originally by wild, nomadic tribes, and finally conquered by the Norsemen, who gave the country its present name, Russia's history is perhaps the most fascinating among the stories of the nations. The Western world can hardly appreciate the autocratic government which is now receiving such unexpected aggression, nor can outsiders understand how resistless has been her expansion in territory and resources until she met a foe that kept her in check in the wilds of China. Her disastrous conflict with the Japanese is covered in the book by another hand. work is in two volumes and illustrated by fifty photogravures, printed on special ivory finish paper, and they are bound in cloth with rich gold side and back decorations. The companion book in the Photogravure Series is naturally "Japan and Her People," written by Anna C. Hartshorne, manufactured outwardly just like the work on "Russia," in two volumes, also with fifty photogravures. This house puts great strength into its International Bibles, and gets them out for the holidays in every variety of new binding. They have new and attractive editions of the "International Self-Pronouncing Bibles: the Christian Workers' Bible," which is indexed and marked in red by the best methods of Bible marking on all subjects connected with the theme of salvation, to enable any person to turn rapidly to verses on these subjects, and to read in consecutive order the passages relating to any one of the passages chosen, or to give Bible readings at a moment's notice on this most important theme. This is a book in great demand by Sunday-school teachers, Y. M. C. A. workers, ministers and students of the Bible. "The International Complete Red Letter Bibles" have markings in Old and

New Testaments in red, showing all the types and prophecies in the Old Testament and all the words of Christ in the New Testament in red, gotten out in two editions with different sizes of type, with references and map, with and without teachers' helps. Specially suited for the holiday booktrade are the "Red Letter Art Bibles," with illustrations in color and black; and a book made ready for this year is "The India Paper Reference Bible," only three-fourths of an inch thick, including the cover. Improbable as it may appear, this house carries 500 different styles of Bibles and Testaments, and before deciding what Bible you will buy be sure you have seen the "International." A most beautiful gift book is "The Quakeress," by Max Adeler, (Charles Heber Clark,) which has been among the great fiction successes of the year. The poetic tale of the quiet young Quaker man, and the more sprightly girl who had a little touch of the world's spirit, is told with rare literary skill, and the book is illustrated in colors by George Gibbs. Other titles of good fiction include "Threads," by Garrett W. Thompson, a story of American life, introducing a striking picture of modern college days and adventures connected with them; "Sawdust, or, a Romance of the Timberlands," by Dorothea Gerard; and "The Embarrassing Orphan," by W. E. Norris, who always has a fine plot and lovable characters. A very useful gift also would be the revised edition of Charles Morris's "Handy Dictionary of Biography," giving sketches of 5000 famous people, past and present.

CAREFUL TENDING MAKES A GARDEN GROW.

Books for Loung People.

Under this heading is given, in alphabetical order of their publishers, a descriptive summary of all the new books offered as specially suitable for young people.

Henry Altemus Company offers good cheer for all the year for boys and girls in "A Little Garden Calendar," of which so excellent a critic as Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin says: "A sweeter or lovelier book, within and without, it would be impossible to find, or one more suggestive and useful to children, parents and teachers." It is by Albert Bigelow Paine, whose delicate, whimsical humor is brought into play in this year book of the garden. Instead of being a dry treatise on seeds and flowers, it is written in a storybook style, introducing two little children and their father as characters, who have long talks on the wonders of plant life. Each month of the year is taken up, telling the seeds that should be planted and the work that should be done in the garden, interweaving traditions, fairy tales and the like relating to plants in such a manner as to both interest and stimulate the child's mind from the very first. There are forty-six excellent illustrations and both type and binding are good. As usual we may look to this house for a number of good stories, healthy in purpose, entertaining, and prettily illustrated and bound. For instance, here is M. R. Housekeeper's "Face the Lions," with the scenes laid in and near London during the latter half of the 17th century when the Civil War, Oliver Cromwell's Protectorate and King Charles's Restoration gave abundant opportunities for fighting, plotting and rescuing. As may be surmised, this story abounds in rapid action and cannot fail to please the adventure-loving young people who dream at home of daring deeds. "The Middleton Bowl," by that delightful writer for children, Ellen Douglas Deland, describes what befell a priceless heirloom, a bowl, which was found broken. Concerned in its history are five elderly women who are as quaint, lovable and amusing as one hopes to meet, and a dear little girl whom one would like to know in the flesh, though Miss Deland has made her so real that one is inclined to believe that she has actually lived. Four other girls figure in Marion Ames Taggart's "The Little Women Club," in which the characters in the immortal "Little Women" came to life agan. Each of the girls in the club assumes the name of one of Miss Alcott's characters; and of course, as there are a "Meg" and a "Jo," a "Beth" and an "Amy," later a "Grandfather Lawrence" and a "Laurie" have to appear also. And so the play is carried to its happy ending. No less satisfactory in its conclusion is "Del's Debt," wherein Julie M. Lippmann tells the story of an orphaned girl who finds a lovely home in a tamily who are not only wealthy and wise, but also charming. It is discovered that Delhas a fine voice, whereupon her good friends make it possible for her to have singing lessons, and her later success is a rich compensation for all the kindness shown her. There is always room for another Sunday book for restless little folks. Gertrude Smith's collection of Bible stories, entitled "Robbie's Bible Stories," are unusually good, retelling in simple language the grand stories which can never grow old. Illustrations, over thirty in number, vividly picture the characters and events of Bible history.

Phelps' college life, and wind up the attractive Winner Series for which the young people are indebted to Everett T. Tomlinson, one of the most entertaining writers of "juvenile" stories as well as one of the brightest and most vivacious teachers of all a manly boy should make his own in the way of desirable qualities and virtues. That Mr. Tomlinson is a college man, and was for some time a successful teacher, is the secret of his minute knowledge of school matters evinced both in this series and others from his pen. He presented Will Phelps in the first volumes of the series, "The Winner" and "Winning his 'W'" as a type of the best of our college boys—not so faultless as to be a "prig," nor so bad as to need any severe criticism. He makes his mistakes, but he owns up to them bravely, and takes his punishments like a man. As freshman and sophomore he has already been depicted. To his career as an upper classman, "Winning his Degree" is dedicated. While we have had plenty college stories even outside of the Winner Series, few writers before have gone into the work, struggles, and experiences of a college junior (and senior). If the book has its lesson in uprightness and truth, and the frank honesty that so becomes a boy in his first manhood, the moral is not disagreeably to the fore. Winthrop College, is of course again the scene and Will Phelps again a leader in class and in games. His chums are amusingly described and their pranks made as laughable as in earlier years. A theft that implicates innocent students, a tennis contest full of spirited incident are among the many events that occur before Will is no longer a student of Winthrop and telegraphs to his father: "Educated! Yours Truly, W. Phelps, B.A." The seniors will read this story with as much pleasure as the juniors; it cannot but recall the happiest days of their lives, in pictures as humorous as they are invigorating.

D. APPLETON & COMPANY have fulfilled generously all the promises of the early fall made to young readers in search of enjoyment and instruction. Their line of Christmas books embraces works of the best American writers of the day, suitable for both girls and boys and for all ages, from the little ones in the nursery to the readers of more mature years. The charming nature books by Robert W. Chambers — "Outdoor - Land," "Orchard-Land" and "River-Land"—have a successor in every way worthy of them in "Forest-Land." It is an attractive quarto, printed in large type, and with many illustrations in color by Emily Benson Knipe. The pictures mostly represent little Geraldine and Peter of the story and are exceedingly graphic. The plan of the book is somewhat similar to its predecessors, its aim being to let children imbibe through a simple, unconscious method facts about nature. Here the woods and their insect denizens are the subjects, the trees often being the talkers and talking to very good effect. Another quarto for the same age children is "The Yellow Cat and Some Friends," by Grace V. R. Dwickle Steiners. Dwight. Stories and colored pictures by Edith Dimock, the one illustrating the other, abound, Not only is the yellow cat a character full of joy to the little ones, but there are stories about robins, and rabbits, and sunflowers, dolls and dolls' houses and all the other things the inmates of the nursery revel in. This also is a big type book, having like "Forestrevel in. Land" a picture cover of bold design, with fancy linings, and numerous graceful head and tail pieces to the chapters in addition to the page pictures in color. Gabrielle E. Jackson, one of the most popular of "juvenile" authors, has prepared a new story for the girls that has a leading place in this house's holiday volumes. "Little Miss Cricket," as the book is called, stands for the dearest little heroine—bright, brave and beautiful. Separated from her mother in a steamboat accident, she falls into the care of a hard, gaunt spinster, who though not theartless, has never before come into contact with any one of the sunshiny, poetical nature of "Miss Cricket," and so in making a drudge of the little girl comes near breaking her heart. There is a happy ending, though, that will bring tears of joy. The Appletons have taken over other books of Miss Jackson, upon which their imprint appears this season. Do not forget them in making your purchases, as they each have an unusual individual charm. Pictures fully illustrate all Miss Jackson's stories.

"I'LL NOT DO IT!"

"Little Miss Sunshine" is a delightful companion to "Little Miss Cricket." The others are "Big Jack, and Other True Stories of Horses," "Little Comrade, the Story of a Cat," and "The Colburn Prize." "Fifty-two Stories for Girls," edited by Alfred H. Miles, represents the best English and American authors, as does "Fifty-two Stories for Boys"." thors, as does "Fifty-two Stories for Boys," collected by the same editor. Four boys books complete Appleton's juveniles for 1905. "The Boy Lincoln," by W. O. Stoddard, and "The Young McKinley," by Hezekiah Butterworth, are biographical sketches of two of our great Presidents who died by an assas-sin's hand. Both writers have high ideals that find ready response in the details even of these boys' youthful days. Boys will like the books; they are rich not only in incident but in inspiration. Camp life in summer is one of the most fascinating subjects for boys. Ralph Henry Barbour, the author of "The Halfback" and so many other books in which sport of various kinds takes a leading place, has added "Four in Camp" to his desirable list. "Four in Camp" tells of the doings of the leaders in a summer camp in New Hampshire, where some thirty or more boys have been collected under the care of a grown man, who puts them through a daily programme of bathing, swimming, walking, etc. They are able to devise mischief enough of their own to keep up their spirits and amuse readers. Kirk Munroe's "The Outcast Warrior" is a tale of the Red Frontier, in the days of the late fifties just before the Civil War. takes one into the very midst of Indian life, the hero being an Eastern man and a college graduate and a physician, who seeks forgetfulness of an unhappy episode in his career in the camp of the Aricarees, the hereditary foes of the Dakotah Indians. In time he takes a wife from among his friends, and becomes the father of a little girl. While on a hunt in search of a white Buffalo he loses his scalp, though not his life. He dare not return thus disgraced to his people, and is hereafter known as "the outcast warrior." His subsequent adventures are equally exciting, including his return to civilization. As may be conjectured, the story is one for a boy pretty well advanced in his teens.

THE BAKER & TAYLOR COMPANY fall in line with a delightful contribution to this department that should claim as sincere appreciation from the "grown-ups" as from youthful readers. While a man looking backward will no doubt see the humorous side to his boyish pranks as he never did in his knickerbocker days, and will often be found with moist eyes as some pathetic incident. (not at all pathetic incident.

incident (not at all pathetic when it happened to the "kid" in trousers) is brought back to his memory—the boy of to-day may seek and successfully discover no end of fun extremely to his taste in this pretty book-whose name we had almost overlooked mentioning is "When You Were a Boy," the author being Edwin L. Sabin and the artist Frederic Dorr Steele. The one supplements the other capitally. All through the text are the quaint figures of the narrative—"Fat Day," Spunk Carey," "Hen Schmidt," "Doc Kennedy" and other chums of "You." Do you not remember when you were a boy. the ball games you played, the first dog you owned, the circus you inaugurated in the garret, the time when you ran away, and the other times when you went fishin? And finally when you fell in love? Do you recall these episodes of your youthful days as you read their counterparts in Mr. Sabin's most amusing and charming sketches? Based no doubt on scenes in his own boyhood, their realism is their chief attraction. These sketches first appeared in leading magazines. such as the Century, Everybody's, and also in the Saturday Evening Post, from which periodicals he received permission to reprint them. The book is printed on thick paper, with wide margins, and is bound in green, with artistic design on front cover. The capital illustra-tions of Frederic Dorr Steele number fifty separate pictures of boyish pranks and interests, all full of high spirits.

A. S. BARNES & COMPANY add a new volume to Captain Bonehill's Outdoor Series called "The Winning Run," a stirring story of out-door life and healthy sport. In the first volume of the series, entitled "The Island Camp," the author took a number of the boys of Lakeport into the depths of the forest during the winter months. Here, in company with a trusted old hunter, they succeeded in bringing down game of various kinds and in learning many of nature's secrets. With the coming of summer the thoughts of the boys turned to baseball, and it was not long before an amateur nine of no mean ability was organized. Challenges were both sent out and received, and in this volume—"The Winning Run"— a number of the games played are described in detail. The rivalry, as in all small towns, was of the "red-hot" variety, and the particulars are also given of a plot to injure the Lakeport nine and thus make them lose the most important game of all. The book is one that all boys will like— as all boys like baseball, our "national game" as it is called. This house's most elaborate book for young people, "The Shakespeare Story Book," by Mary MacLeod, will be found reviewed at length in front.

BENZIGER BROTHERS have various books of devotion and some lighter reading specially fitted for young Catholics. "Mary, the Queen," is a life of the Pleased Mother the Blessed Mother for her little ones; "The Catholic Girl's Guide" is edited by Rev. F. X. Lasance; and "Light for New Times," by Margaret Fletcher, is a book for Catholic girls full of good advice. In lighter vein are "The Juvenile Round Table —Third Series," full of good short stories by special favorites of the children; "The Catholic Home An-nual for 1906," with astronomical calculations, tables of feasts and fasts, etc. "The Violin Maker," from the original of Otto von Schaching, by Sara Trainer Smith, is a most fascinating story full of information of violin making in the seventeenth century. Young Matthias Klotz, the son of a poor tailor in the Mittenwald of Old Germany, is consumed with ambition to become a violin maker, but his father is too poor to let him learn the trade. By chance he meets Stainer, a maker of violins, and he agrees to teach him free of charge. After graduating from this school he goes to Cremona and here learns his art in higher form under the great Amati. Later Mattias married and had three sons, all of whom he instructed in the art of which he had made a religion. He first brought violin making to honor in Germany, and his name still lives among the people, for he furnished them with a means of living from which their descendants still derive the benefit. "The Children of Cupa, by Mary E. Mannix, is the story of a family who came to Lower California for their mother's health, and there become interested in the Indian natives and learned much of their history, manners, and customs. "For the White Rose," by Katharine Tynan Hinkson, retells the thrilling story of the Stuarts and Whigs in the seventeenth century; and "The Dollar Hunt," from the French, is a story of the true value and great use of money and its attendant dangers. "Wayward Winifred" is the most recent work of Anna T. Sadlier, the gifted and favorite writer. It opens in Ireland, in the midst of a most romantic country surrounding a ruined castle, introducing at once the beautiful little heroine Winifred. That she is the centre of a mystery is evident at a glance. An American lady visiting Ireland is fascinated with her and gradually unfolds her story.

The Bobbs-Merrill Company are standing sponsor for another of L. Frank Baum's inimitable books, wherein the author's rich humor and quaint imagination have full play. His "Mother Goose in Prose" will answer all those questions that have been simmering in the minds of countless little people whose first introduction to fairyland has been made by dear old Mother Goose. Here Mr. Baum explains why King Cole had such queer tastes for a monarch, how Humpty Dumpty happened to be sitting in so precarious a position, what made Jack Horner go to the corner, and the reasons which made Bo-Peep's sheep lose themselves and yet hold on to their tails. The author has been ably seconded in his investigations in Mother Goose lore by Maxwell Parrish. This artist's fancy has caught the very spirit of the tales and his skill has depicted it in exquisite color and form. Not content with issuing this fascinating book, the Bobbs-Merrill Company also have ready a new edition of Mr. Baum's "Father Goose: His Book," with Denslow's original illustrations, and printed on tinted paper. For older children there is an entertaining book by Cornelia Baker, entitled "The Queen's Page," recounting the experiences of boy and girl twins, descendants of a noble family of Na-They are brought to the court of the resplendent French king, Francis I., in the suite of Jeanne, Duchess of Cleves, the king's nicce and a very self-willed young princess in the bargain, and they meet all manner of famous folk known to history and take part in royal shows, proving themselves brave-spirited children, worthy of their lineage. Josephine S. Gates's "The Story of the Lost Doll" will appeal to almost any youngster with its account of the mysterious disappearance and reappearance of a doll. A year or more ago there was published a charming collection of animal folk-tales told by two. old darkey "mammies" to three children on a Virginia plantation after the war. Anna V. Culbertson is the author of "At the Big House," which this season is issued in a new edition, with many full-page colored pictures and marginal drawings as amusing as the stories, by E. Warde Blaisdell. All boys will approve of "Pipetown Sandy," by the "March King," Sousa. Pipetown Sandy did not take kindly to learning in the village school; but when a rich invalid boy becomes his teacher, a new world of nature is opened to him. Sandy later does his teacher great credit by becoming an inventor and also a large-spirited man.

H. M. CALDWELL COMPANY signalize the holiday season by introducing a new juvenile series, sure to please hosts of animal lovers. It is called the Animal Autobiographical Series, and each volume contains the story of an animal as told by himself, the incidents, as far as possible, having been taken from life and showing accurate knowledge of the traits of animals. This year's numbers include "Pup," by Olive Hurd Bragdon, telling the story of an English greyhound; "Yoppy," by Mollie L. Clifford, giving the adventures of a clever little monkey who was stolen by an organ-grinder; and "Neddy" by Gertrude Sellon, relating the true history of a muchtried donkey. Each of the books has a frontispiece in colors as well as pleasing half-tones. The old-time favorite Pleasant Street Series has three additions, two being animal stories. "The Bird Hospital" is by Caroline C. Bascom, who brightly discusses the various wild birds that have come under her care; "A Tale of Two Terriers, Crib and Fly," is edited by Charles Welsh, who stands as authority for all the canine pranks here recounted; and "Little Mildred's Secret," by Grace Squires, is a pathetic story of a wee girl, saddened by separation from her family, but determined to put a brave face on it. Pretty pictures and binding lend attraction to the stories. For the little toddlers, this house has ready The Nursery Hour Series, each volume being made up of familiar rhymes, parodied, and illustrated and printed in colors with a gorgeous cover. The first three volumes are "Bunny's House and Other Rhymes," "Santa Claus' Rat and Other Rhymes," and "Farmer Fox and Other Rhymes," There are four new titles added to the well liked Six to Sixteen Series; four also to the Editha Series; and several each to Famous Books for Boys and Famous Books for Girls, consisting of stories that have stood the test of time.

THE GOLDEN GOOSE.

THE CENTURY COMPANY have ready a delightful surprise for little folks in "Queen Zixi of Ix." With L. Frank Baum of "The Wizard of Oz" fame as guide we are introduced into a fairy kingdom, and are told of a magical cloak which grants to each wearer just one wish. Now the king of this land, called Noland, is a little peasant lad who quite unexpectedly becomes ruler of this wonderful kingdom. But soon the magic cloak, passed from hand to hand, begins to create very strange complications, and, in the midst of the confusion, a queer race of mischiefmaking monsters, known as the Roly-Rogues, descend upon Noland and-but that would be telling. So we shall instead recommend every one to get the book itself and find out all about it, and see the lovely pictures in color that Frederick Richardson has painted. Those older boys and girls who long years ago, so they think, passed beyond the fairy tale age, will find instructive and, at the same time, entertaining reading in Tudor Jenks's "Captain Myles Standish," telling the history of that brave, true soldier, who while not a Puritan, joined his fortunes with the May flower Pilgrims and gave his military skill, wise counsel and indomitable courage to the struggling Plymouth colony. Mr. Jenks has not only achieved a sympathetic portrayal of this little known man, but has also recounted the early history of the colony and the events in England which led up to the desperate expedition to the New World. The author of "Pinkey Perkins" is without doubt a man who is still three-quarters a boy-one who has not forgotten how it feels to be bubbling over with mischief which must be let out. In "Pinkey Perkins" Captain Harold Hammond has presented a bona fide American boy, full of pranks and original nonsense, but sound of heart and quick of brain. Pinkey's life in school and village was hardly in line with the standard set by Sunday-school book heroes; still there is nothing malicious, underhanded or really wrong in any of his adventures. Again bound volumes of St. Nicholas are ready, the last, alas, which will bear the imprint of Mrs. Dodge's able editorship. No better present can be chosen than the two volumes of the current year or a subscription for 1906, which will mean a Christmas present twelve times a year. And in this connection it may be noted that the Century Company have in preparation a series of "Historical Stories" culled from St. Nicholas, and can now offer a volume of "Indian Stories." This project has been suggested by the success of a similar series of "Animal Stories," published a year ago.

T. Y. CROWELL & COMPANY have several collections of standard works for young people, that are in selection and in make-up among the very best in the market. Their Children's Favorite Classics comprise works that delight all young readers, and should be in-cluded in their permanent library. There are too many of them to do more than mention a few, such as "Alice in Wonderland," "Black Beauty," "Jackanapes," "Tanglewood Tales," "Tales from Shakespeare," "Robinson Crusoe," "Swiss Family Robinson," and many, many others all bound in durable cloth, in uniform style, with special designs in colors for each volume. The Handy Volume Classics include works always in demand that would make charming presents for young people as well as old. Then there are the Standard Books for Young People, the Golden Hour Series for Young People and the new and cheaper edition of Jacob Abbott's famous "Rollo" books, the delight of a former generation, all offering a choice of unusual richness and variety to Christmas shoppers. latest little volume of child verse to bid for popular favor has an apt title and comes in alluring dress. It is entitled "Rhymes of Little Boys," by Burges Johnson, and is bound in a striking plaid gingham, with pasted label and decorative wrapper. The "Goin" Barefoot," "Bein' Sick," "Gettin' Well," "Cookin' Things," "Apple-Pie," "Ketchin' Rides," "Gettin' Washed," "Pirates' Cave," and numerous other things of perennial interest. And Mr. Johnson has preserved the boyish flavor to an admirable degree. The verses impress one as being true to life, as well as pleasing on their own account. The bulk of them are in the small boy language; while others at the end of the book are addressed to boys. This is one of the Crowell's leading gift books. Along with it are ranged their Twentieth Century Juveniles so pretty in appearance, so well-written and from the best authors. The additions to the series this year are "Beaufort Chums," by Edwin L. Sabin, having its scene on the Mississippi River, when it has overflowed the levees and destroyed much property; two boy friends rescue a dog, deserted by its owners, and from that time onward, the boys and the dog make history. Besides the hunting, fishing, camping, swimming, and skating adventures, which are related with all the fidelity of a fellow adventurer, we find a good picture of a river town, especially as viewed by its younger population. "The Family on Wheels," a story adapted from the French by J. MacDonald Oxley and illustrated by E. Boyd Smith, tells of the unique way in which a group of orphan children earn a living. Travelling with a trained elephant, dog and horse, they stop on the road and give exhibitions. The little mountebanks are pretty and witty and have really a good show, which attracts attention everywhere, their own personalities making friends for them, and leading on to fortune. The story is delightfully told, the spirit of the French provinces being well retained, the pathos of some of the situations giving way to flashes of humor and excitement, the ending being all that could be desired. The illustrations fit the story, and add to the quaint flavor. The third Twentieth Century juvenile is "The Story of the Big Front Door," by Mary F. Leonard, and has for characters a group of lively, healthy, spirited youngsters ready for any kind of fun, and most ingenious in inventing pastimes. The girls start a club called the "Merry Knitters" and the boys in return start another with the motto "helped every one his neighbor." The chronicles of the clubs will both help and please young people.

Dodd, Mead & Company have been especially thoughtful of the girls, the majority of their Christmas books having girl heroines, though an occasional boy is permitted to take part in the fun. Their "leader" is "The True Story of Humpty Dumpty," by Anna Alice Chapin, author of "Babes in Toyland" and other successful "juveniles." Ethel Franklin Betts, the well-known illustrator, furnishes the many lovely page pictures in color and the decorations—that is the head and tail pieces, the cover design, the charming design on the linings of cover, etc. The story relates to three little children who not only did not believe generally in fairy tales, but even were daring enough to scoff at Santa Claus and Mother Goose. They all fell asleep one evening on the rug before the nursery fire, and some very strange things happened. A queer little green early string that the little green sprite visited them and announced he was Bizzybuzz, sent by Mother Goose to summon them all three to Make Believe Land! Though frightened, they cannot resist the command, and make the journey directed by Bizzybuzz on the back of a huge white owl. Arrived in Make Believe Land and confronted with Mother Goose, they are scolded well for their unbelief, and each is set a task as punishment, that a more healthy state of mind may be arrived at. One child is told to go in search of Humpty Dumpty, and release him from the enthralment of a wicked ma-gician, who has changed him into an egg. The two little girls, and the swaggering little boy start on their pilgrimages, and have wonderful things happen to them, meet the queerest birds and fairies and altogether have a bewildering time. The story is full of poetry, and has a moral too, though carefully disguised. Altogether in reading matter and pictures it stands as one of the most important of the holiday books. Second only in beauty and desirability is "The Wild Flower Fairy Book," compiled by Esther Singleton from the folk tales of all nations. There are tales from the French, and the English, the German, Danish, Norwegian, the Japan-ese, Arabian and Hindu. Some of them have been heard before, not one, however, but will bear a second and a third reading. The artistic side here is in the hands of Charles B. Falls. Each text page has a flower design in outline, covering the page and printed in a green tint. The illustrations embrace many page pictures in colors. A group of busy, happy, healthy minded children dance through Barbara Yechton's "Some Adventures of Jack and Jill," making reading matter of the best kind for other children. The book is not in any way sensational, dealing with the doings of the average girl and boy. In this case the scene is on a coral island belonging to Great Britain, the illustrations being characteristic.

For genuine humor, of the most mirth-provoking kind, the author who writes under the name of "E. Nesbit" (Mrs. Herbert Bland), is warmly recommended. Those who read her "Phœnix and the Carpet" and "The Wouldbegoods" know just what to look for in "Five Children and It," a delightful fairy tale of five children upon whom a certain fairy bestows the power to have all their wishes come true. The story in spite of its unsubstantial basis, is so modernized as to be most acceptable to children. Amanda M. Douglas has written another "Little Girl" book, Martha Finley another "Elsie" book, and Carolyn Wells another "Patty" book. What better news can there be than this to the adorers of these popular and charming heroines? Each writer puts into her story just those fascinating details of a delightful home life, that all young people revel in. No tears are demanded for the fortunes of the three girls introduced—everything going as merrily as wedding bells to the end. Miss Wells in "Patty in the City" depicts a happy winter spent by winsome Patty Fairfield in New York City with her widowed father and "Grandma." Hard study at a finishing school alternates with Saturday afternoons that are dreams of delight, and Patty has her romance as well as her handsome young father, that girls will read and envy. "A Little Girl in Old San Francisco" is, we think, one of the best, if not the best of the Little Giri Series. It makes the San Francisco of fifty years ago so real, and is so rich in information that older people will be as eager to read it as young ones. The "little girl" was a native of Maine, who travelled with her old family friend to the Pacific coast in the beginning of the outbreak of the gold fever. She sees many strange sights, discovers a father she thought dead, who is rich enough to take her abroad, where she refuses a lord, preferring the lover she had left in California. "Elsie and her Namesakes" makes the twenty-seventh volume of the Elsie books, and yet it is just as much in demand as if it were among the first volumes of the chronicles of this popular heroine, whose first entrance into the realms of romance was read by the mothers of this generation. Many old friends are brought together again at Woodburn and Grandma Elsie is as charming as of old, making delightful evenings for the young folks in reciting stories of Washington, Lincoln, etc.

TO-DAY IS MY TENTH BIRTHDAY.

DODGE PUBLISHING COMPANY have made books for children and they know what pleases children, and this year they have made a most satisfactory supply of tempting Christmas attractions. Robert Louis Stevenson's "A Child's Garden of Verses" appears in an illustrated edition. The chief feature of this new edition of Stevenson's child verse is the numerous charming colored illustrations by Bessie Collins Pease. The delicate and captivating work from the pencil and brush of this artist is in strong sympathy with these old favorite verses which continue to delight both young and old. "Gammer Grethel's Fairy Tales" come from the provision of the inexhaustible Brothers Grimm. They are translated by Edgar Taylor, the first translator, and have the original thirty-four full-page illustrations by George Cruikshank and others. Anne Batchelor has in "Old Nursery Rhymes" a collection of taking little verses that at once impress themselves upon the child's memory; and in "The Story of Jesus" a collection of charmingly put Bible stories, both with many illustrations in color; and "Lamb's Shakespeare" is a new version of the famous "tales," with many charming illustrations by Helen Stratton. A beautiful wall card for the nursery is "Who Entereth" Here," by Max Ehrmann, author of "A Prayer." It is printed on Japanese wood in two colors and forms a most beautiful companion to the former work.

DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY have ready four particularly good books for holiday selection. A mine of fairy wealth will be found in Violet Jacob's collection of fairy tales under the name title, "The Golden Heart." This gifted author has turned her story telling faculty to good use in helping to gladden the lives of countless children with these eight delightful stories, rich in fancy, absorbing in interest, and characterized by unusual literary excel-lence. Miss May Sand-heim has added many pleasing illustrations. The line of demarkation between fairy lore and myths is so slight as to be undiscoverable; there-fore, Hamilton W. Ma-bie's volume of "Myths Every Child Should Know" has many of the qualities of fairy literature. Dr. Mabie has laid tax upon the mythology of Greece, Rome, Germany, and Scandina-via, culling from each such myths as will especially appeal to a child's imagination. He has made his selection with rare judgment and taste, so that one finds between the covers of this book the tale of "The Dragon's Teeth," and "The Quest of the Hammer," "The Argonauts" and "How Odin Lost His Eye," as well as a dozen other titles. Blanche Ostertag's skilful pencil has visualized the very spirit of the myths. The volume is gotten up in uniform style with Dr. Mabie's Poems and Fairy Tales that "Every Child Should Know." Meredith Nugent's "New Games and Amusements" will be a treasure trove to distracted mothers at their wits' end to know how to keep the children out of mischief. Put this book in the youngsters' hands and they will be kept occupied for days. They will learn how to make giant soap bubbles that will last five to ten minutes; sunshine engines, circus kites, tops, automobiles, egg-shell clowns, etc., etc., numberless new toys that will delight the jaded taste of twentieth century children. The directions are supplemented by numerous drawings showing how the various devices should look in parts and when completed. Similar in purpose is "The Child's Rainy Day Book," wherein Mary White Talbot has turned her practical and inventive knowledge to excellent account. She describes in simple language how to make paper flowers and toys, what can be done with beads, how to make baskets, how to model in clay and various other useful and pretty occupations for little fingers, only kept in order when kept busy. And again the pictures are a most effective part of the book.

E. P. Dutton & Co. have children's books that are things of beauty, and appeal to children from the days when they know only color and shape until they reach an age when the standard literature of the world can be put before them enriched by color, print and bindings that make them long to enjoy and to possess. "Dutton's Holiday Annual" has reached the eighteenth year of its continued and increasing success, and this year has accomplished what would seem an impossibility; it is more full of good things and prettier than ever. All the old favorite names show in its contents—G. Manville Fenn, L. T. Meade, L. L. Weedon and hosts of others have done their best, and the equally familiar names appear among the artists. The adventures of Shipwrecked Jumbo and his bear Friday are told in "Jumbo Crusoe," with irresistibly comic pictures by G. H. Thompson; "The Little People's Book of Wild Animals" teaches natural history in the words of G. Manville Fenn and Geraldine Glasgow, and is full of pictures of truth and beauty besides; "The Jingle Book" has rhymes by J. R. Monsell that at once fasten on the nursery memory; and "The Old Woman Who Rode on a Broom," by T. Butler Stoney, contains many humorous drawings that will delight the parents as much as "the kids." Does not the title "the kids." Does not the title

"The Fairy Bird and Piggy Wig, and Other Stories" promise lots of fun and Mabel Chadburn's words and the pictures in color and black and white more than realize expectation;
"The Children's Christmas Treasury" is edited by Edward Hutton, and contains about thirty old new fairy stories and the same number of bright illustrations also in colors and black and white. And when you come to cater for your little nephews and nieces of larger growth remember "The North Pacific," by Willis Boyd Allen, who tells the entrancing story of the just ended Russo-Japanese war, with its Japanese hero. who was present in every kind of danger and adventure; or, "The Lost Treasure Cave," in which Everett McNeil takes his schoolboy heroes on a visit to Southern Colorado and shows them Indians. bandits, cowboys and big game, and all the delights and perils of ranch life; or, "The Diary of a Girl in France," kept by a girl of fourteen in the year 1821, who also made her own pictures of all the strange things she saw, and now shares her experiences with other girls of fourteen; or, Theodore Wood's "A Natural History of Mammals," and "A Natural History of Birds, Fishes, etc.," which teach natural history so it can never be forgotten, and show all the animals in fine, accurately colored pictures. And now we come to the dear old stories, and the Duttons have put many of them into a series called Told to the Children, beautifully printed and illustrated in colors, and in these little volumes they can learn the stories the world has always loved of "Robin Hood," "King Arthur's Knights," "The Faerie Queen," "Kingsley's Heroes," "The Water Babies," "Old Testament Stories," and "Stories from the Life of Christ." And three new volumes are added to Alice Spencer's delightfully told "Stories from Shakespeare for Children," and they can now learn of Julius Cæsar, "Ham!et" and "Macbeth," with footnotes of the "hard words" and many artistic illustrations. "Stories of King Arthur and the Round Table" are presented by Beatrice Clay, with illustrations by Dora Curtis; "Child Characters from Dickens" are presented by L. L. Weedon, chiefly in the words of Dickens, with illustrations by Arthur A. Dixon; and there is a new edition of "Robinson Crusoc," with J. Ayton Symington's celebrated illustrations. Good news for the boys is the reissue of Captain Mayne Reid's stories, which will please them as they did their fathers and mothers. Does it not fire even an uptodate boy to hear such tit'es as "Afloat in the Forest," "The Death Shot," "The Headless Horseman," and "The White Chief"? The Duttons also control the Nister color books made in Nuremberg, Germany. Finer color printing does not exist in the world today. It's so good for the little tots to see such animals as Nister prints. Get them "Cat Tales," "Dog Tales," "Moo-Cow Tales" or "Horse Tales," and when they go to sleep just sit down and look at them yourself. You'll envy the children.

ter Day, illustrated by Spencer Wright. "A Book of Nature"; "A Letter to the Little" and "Flowers of Fate," a book of fortune telling, are all calculated to interest. "The Long Tale of a Short Tale" is thirty verses long: "Children of the Theoremstate"." long; "Children of the Thornwreath," Gertrude Le Page, illustrated by Marion Holden, tells a very pretty story; and "Some Children's Letters About Wild Animals I Have Known" show the observation of bright minds and a quaint childish way of putting their discoveries. Every book on Paul Elder's list is a little model of book-making, and nothing is better for children than to have all their books tasteful and well-made. Parents and guardians do a great wrong when they give children books on poor paper with figures out of drawing and coloring that "cries to heaven." All publishers that spend money for fine illustrations and do artistic color printing are really benefactors among the little ones. And then these publishers always have cheerful books, and that also is a boon and a blessing. Young people cannot learn early enough to look on the bright side of life, and nothing grows more rapidly than a cheerful spirit when properly fed by bright tales of bravery and content.

DANA ESTES & COMPANY always know what kind of stories young people will like and enlist the help of such favorite authors as Ellis, Otis, Harriet A. Cheever, Evelyn Raymond and the like to provide Christmas surprises. For the boys' share this year there is "The Minute Boys of the Mohawk Valley," told in James Otis's most stirring style, recounting the adventures of two sturdy American boys during 1777 when Joseph Brant, the great Mohawk chief, entered New York from Canada, hoping to combine with the Royalists against the patriots. "Plucky Jo" is also a story to delight any ordinary boy, especially as it is written by another of the boys' own authors. Edward S. Ellis has drawn a picture of a fine manly fellow, a good fighter, a better friend and an all-round honest, bright chap, whom every one likes. He is introduced as a freckled-face youngster; and we do not part with him until he has been graduated from Princeton and has started in business; and right sorry we are to say good-bye even then. A new volume in The Young of Heart Series is about a country-loving boy whose father buys a twohundred-and-ten-acre farm, where Charley has the time of his life, raising crops, fishing, hunting and lumbering. This book is entitled "The Old Monday Farm" and is written by Louise R. Baker. "Mr. Penwiper's Fairy Godmother," also in this series, is a droll little story wherein these is playing for the series. definition of the contrary by the weil-known and greatly liked Harriet A. Cheever. She has spun a delightful year, about two youngsters, one a delightful yarn about two youngsters, one a street Arab, the other an indulged child of wealth, both of whom find themselves on a thip sailing the ocean which they find very frequently is not at all blue. The friendship formed between these boys and the incidents of their voyage make an intensely interesting tale. Mrs. Cheever's name is also on the title-page of "Josie Bean: Flat Street," but in this case she has written for girls who will undoubtedly be absorbed in the history of the poor girl who first became a milliner's assistant, and later, because of her many winning qualities, was offered the chance to study art and even go to Paris. Quite different are the surroundings of the heroine of Evelyn Raymond's "The Brass Bound Box." She lives in a big, old country house, furnished with traditions and a mystery as well as furniture, and there she and a jolly young boy have all manner of adventures, leading to a happy ending. Laura E. Richards, beloved of girl readers, has ready a new Christmas tale called "The Arm-strongs," composed of letters written to their mother by three city girls who go to spend the summer with their mother's spinster cousin on a big ancestral farm. And there they have all varieties of good times, assisted by the girls' older brother. For girls' smaller girls the Estes have ready "Mary 'n' Mary," a poor Mary and a rich Mary, both fun-loving little girls who are, like all healthy children, in and out of mischief. Almost all young girls love to fuss around the kitchen, getting very much in cook's way, and producing dishes that even doting parents find difficult to digest. "A Little Cook-Book for a Little Girl," by the author of "Gala Day Luncheons," is for just such little girls. It explains how to make plain and pretty things to eat; how to prepare cereals, eggs, soups, salads, desserts and candies, the directions being given in simple, understandable language suitable to girls from eight to fourteen years old. No more useful gift can be selected for aspiring cooks than this. Several new titles have been added to the Boys' Own Authors' Series, which is made up of old favorites well bound and sold at a uniform price. The Little People's Series is designed for children from seven to ten years of age, and contains stories by popular authors, prettily illustrated and neatly bound. And, as usual, there is the yearly volume of "Chatterbox," a mine of wealth to children of all varieties of taste.

Fox, Duffield & Company have on their list some books as dainty and original as one can hope to find. "Verses for Jock and Joan" is a square quarto, encased in picture covers and charmingly illustrated with full-page illustrations in softly blending colors by the skilful brush of Charlotte Harding. And there are also marginal pictures depicting the joys, woes and diversions of youngster-hood. But have we said that the verses are written by the gifted Helen Hay Whitney? Some five years ago Mrs. Whitney published her "Little Boy Book," which showed an exquisite lightness of touch, sympathetic imagination and keen appreciation of the child's point of view. All these qualities are observable in this new collection of verses. They seem to sing themselves from the very heart of a child and touch on older heart strings at the same time In Virginia Gerson's "More Adventures of the Happy Heart Family," we meet old acquaintances come to life again, and very glad we are to meet them. One of last sea-son's prettiest surprises was the "Happy Heart Family," wherein gay and lively Hearts, pictured in dainty colors, disported themselves in amazing adventures. In this new book we first come across Mother-Heart, Papa Good-Heart and the little Hearts cast up on the beach after having been tumbled out of the Catama-nanny-boat by a high wave. Later on they meet the Valentine family, and the amusing story ends, as all holiday stories should, with Kris Kringle, a tree and loads of presents. Miss Gerson is responsible not only for the fascinating illustrations but also for the no less original text. Mrs. Candace Wheeler tells us in "Double Darling and the Dream Spinner," that Doubledarling was so named because she was twice as good and twice as beautiful as any other little girl—or, so her family thought. And as her father gets for her a wonderful dream spinner, we have here a group of thoroughly entertaining stories which were first told by the dream spinner to Doubledarling and are now shared with other boys and girls who are undoubtedly thrice-darling to their mothers and fathers. Certainly Mrs. Wheeler knows just what kind of a story little folks like; and they will also heartily approve of the tinted pictures provided by Dora Wheeler Keith. One must not forget to menton that Fox, Duffield have ready a new third edition of Kate D. Sweetser's "Ten Girls from Dickens," and another edition also of Mrs. Sangster's "The Little Kingdom of Home," either of which will make an acceptable gift for older girls.

Funk & Wagnalls Company have just the book to give to a boy in "The Boys' Life of Christ," by the Rev. William Byron Forbush. The book is made to appeal strongly to the boy nature. Christ is seen playing the games of boys; camping out with the fishermen; sailing the lake in the storm; braving the enmity of the mighty; dying like a soldier for a holy cause. Text and illustration portray the character of Jesus, with the same vividness and movement as are found in the favorite juvenile biographies of popular heroes.

GINN & COMPANY were among the pioneers with nature stories and William J. Long among the first who listened to "the cry of the wild." He is the author of a delightful list of works on the inhabitants of the forest, on the fishes, the birds of the air and other wild things, that are already well known in schools and homes. Children love such books, they while away many restless hours of enforced imprisonment in the nursery, when driven indoors by rain or snow. They not only derive entertainment but information from the reading, crying constantly for "more." "School of the Woods," perhaps more than any other single book, has called more than any other single book, has called attention to Mr. Long's studies of animals and birds, and has shown him to be a keen observer and truthful recorder. Other works along the same line are "A Little Brother of the Bear," "Following the Deer," "Beasts of the Field," and "Fowls of the Air." Mr. Long's Wood Folk Series has become a classic the titles of its various volbecome a classic, the titles of its various vol-umes being "Ways of Wood Folk," "Wilder-ness Ways," and "Secrets of the Woods," and "Wood Folk at School." A cheaper edition of A new holiday edition of the "Seven Little Sisters" is among the other good things they would call attention to. Jane Andrews's books have for years been among the most sought after in this class of literature. Age has not yet told on them or staled their "infinite variety." Looking further through this list are the works of Margaret W. Morley on "Insect Folk" and butterflies, bees and flowers, "Bird Portraits," by Ernest Thompson Seton, "Mother Nature's Children," by Allan Walter Gould, and others too numerous to specify. specify.

HARPER & BROTHERS have in "The Coming a work readers of any age would enjoy. Although the story centres around a little boy of seven or eight years, it has its romance brought to a happy conclusion through Billy's intervention. Billy was sent from India to visit five maiden aunts in a small English town. Their efforts to coddle him and treat him as a baby are amusingly resented, the boy being a fine manly little fellow, who has had high ideas of truth and honor instilled into him by his soldier father. He is a regular little George Washington, his very unconventonal honesty at times being most laughable. The author is Margaret Westhrup, who thoroughly understands boy nature. The Russo-Japanese war finds timely treatment in Kirk Munroe's "For the Mikado." Two boys, a Japanese and an American, from being roommates and "chums" at Annapolis, become officers in the Japanese navy, at the breaking out of the war in the East, and are figures in a series of unusual adventures, in which the sub-marine boat is greatly in evidence. growing boy should inform himself thoroughly on all current topics, particularly on one so world-famed as the Russo-Japanese war. "For the Mikado" will throw light on much he never knew before, and will appeal to him with all the force of novelty of all the force of nowelty of subject, and a rattling good story also. The very little ones had prepared for them "Wee Winkles and Wideawake," by Gabrielle E. Jackson, and "Little Mother and Georgie," by Gertrude Smith. The title of the first book stands for the pet pames of a stands for the pet names of a little brother and sister who lived in a pretty town called Shadydale. Their true names were Herbert King and Pansy King, and their ages six and eight. The simple annals of their little lives told in short words and in large type make an appropriate book for little ones just beginning to read for themselves. "Little Mother and Georgie" belongs in the same category. Gertrude Simith will be recalled as the author of "The Roggie and Reggie Stories." This handsome octavo tells of the plays of "Little Mother" Florence, five years old, and "Georgie" who was Grandpa. Grandpa dressed up as a "kid" and mothered by Florence is funny enough. Florrie in mother's shawl and bonnet takes "Georgie" walking, out in "Georgie" walking, out in the cars, sings him to sleep, and goes through other plays as quaint as they are ingenious.

HENRY HOLT & COMPANY'S "The Peter Newell Mother Goose" will be a fascinating surprise for youngsters all over the land. Peter Newell's pictures were never more droll, more quaint, than these presenting Mother Goose episodes, which Carolyn S. Bailey has cleverly connected in a history of a little girl's adventures in Gooseland. The old, old, tavorites are met here, saying the familiar old rhymes under original circumstances, with Peter Newell's queer little men and women appearing in most extraordinary positions. and enjoy again and again. "The Wizards of Ryetown" is also comic and absurd in spirit. Reversing the accustomed order, the heroine fares forth to seek the prince, and in an enchanted wood meets animals wise and otherwise, as well as a most malicious witch and the many ludicrous inhabitants of Ryetown. But the story ends in the good old way with marriage bells and happiness "ever after."

"YOU AIN'T USED TO LONDON, BE YOU SISSY."

Carrol W. Rankin has written a capital story for girls, entitled "Dandelion Cottage," with Florence Scovel Shinn's and Elizabeth Finley's illustrations. It tells of the experiences of four young girls who are given the use of a tumble-down cottage for the summer. What a healthy, happy, jolly time they have playing house! It will make almost any normal girl want to go and do likewise next summer. Marion Ames Taggart's "Nut Brown Joan" is also about a little housekeeper. She is the ugly duckling of a large family, and being an energetic lovable child more than her share of the family burdens fall on her shoulders. But, withal, she manages to have many frolies and to steer the family through domestic and financial difficulties. "The Boys of Bob's Hill," by Charles P. Burton, is essentially a boys' book, though boys' sisters will like it also, we are confident. These New England youngsters have anything but a tranguil life, for do we not all know that where two or three boys are gathered together, there is always something "doing."

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY are unusually fortunate this season in having a brilliantly written book for boys from the pen of Arthur Stringer, hitherto a writer of novels and poems. More or less based upon his own childish days, apparently, as was Aldrich's "Story of a Bad Boy," the air of reality that pervades "Lonely O'Malley" is its greatest charm. Its quaint philosophical reflections and attractive literary style and the many original poems interspersed through the narrative will, however, be quite wasted upon the little secker after mere amusement. To the "grown-ups" the author must turn for true appreciations of Lonely's most complex characteristics and the underlying humor of many of his escapades. The boys will find enough, too, to satisfy them. Louely is a "limb," the terror of his neighborhood, and with such a vivid imagination that the "unvarnished" truth is an impossibility with him. His goat has as much histrionic ability as himself, while there is not much in the way of trapping, fishing, playing Indian or raiding a neighbor's orchard that is unknown to him. We are happy to add that with all these undeniable shortcomings he possesses a few virtues, several heroic acts being placed to his credit. Frank T. Merrill's sketches are keenly interpretive of the humor of the many funny and dramatic situations. An almost forgotten chapter of the Revolutionary Warthe Cherry Valley massacre in the year 1778has been made the central theme of Everett T. Tomlinson's "The Red Chief." Brant, the renowned Mohawk chief, is the hero of this tragic story of the cruel murder of the defenceless people on the New York frontiers after the surrender of Burgoyne. The story after the surrender of Burgoyne. is not all sad, nor dryly historical, having stirring accounts of experiences and adventures that cannot fail to appeal to all intelligent boys-and their sisters likewise-as we see no reason why girls should be debarred from reading their brother's books. A charming little book made doubly attractive by the fine literary qualities of Eliza Orne White and the artistic ability of Katharine Pyle is "An Only Child." Not only its illustrations but its Not only its illustrations, but its cover design are the work of Miss Pyle, making a most appropriate setting to Miss White's story. Lois, the only child, has been brought up by herself, and mourns for companions of her own age. These she finds in the family of the new minister, and in the minister himself, whom the little girl learns to love dearly through his fine sympathy for youth and his companionship. The scene is a country town, and there is little to tell outside of Lois's adoption of a stray kitten, good times at Sundayschool picnics, tea parties and so on, with other joys and sorrows of an only child. Last holiday season was celebrated with the issue of Olive Thorne Miller's "Kristy's Queer Christmas." This popular writer again presents in "Kristy's Surprise Party" a book on similar lines and of similar appearance, illustrated in colors and with a striking pictorial cover by Ethel N. Farnsworth, giving the volume a decided holiday appearance. The friends who participated in Kristy's Christmas give her a surprise party, at which each tells a story and presents to her a story book. There are sixteen independent stories, varying from the deepest pathos to the wildest fun. Short stories comprise the contents of two inveniles to be highly recommended, "The Star Jewels," by Abbie Farwell Brown, and "The Golden Goose," by Eva March Tappan.

Though both are collections of fairy tales, they have points of difference. The initial story of "The Star Jewels" gives an authentic account of the origin of star fish, which were, the author says, "of course originally set in the sky as five-pointed jewels" This theme is carried out both in the text and in the makeup of the book, the whole being in fives, like the points of a starfish. There are five little stories, five tiny poems intimately connected therewith, five large pictures, and five small ones. Each is complete in itself, yet a part of the scheme of the book. Thus the whole makes an acceptable chain of little jewels, strung together for the children's pleasure, like the little mermaid's necklace spoken of in the first The second collecstory. The second collection, "The Golden Goose, consists of six fairy tales from ancient Scandinavian sources, well told in simple, direct language suitable for little children. An exquisitely beautiful new edition of Hawthorne's "Wonder Book for Girls and Boys," illustrated profusely with colored designs by Walter Crane, in full pages, head and tail pieces, etc., is one of the muchto-be coveted holiday books

ing age. Hurst's Young America Library comprises one hundred and fifty volumes that have all been tested by time. They represent the best efforts of "Oliver Optic," Horatio Alger, Jr., J. T. Trowbridge, Jacob Abbott and other writers whose books have become as familiar as "household words." The additions for this season are two of "Oliver Optic's" stories upon which the copyright has just expired entitled "In School and Out" and "Rich and Humble." They are issued in several other of their series, and may be bought at most reasonable prices and in most attractive form. Hurst's Home Scries for Girls has been selected with just as much care as the foregoing series, and contains the very cream of juvenile literature prepared for girls. Hurst's whole catalogue should be carefully examined by buyers for the home, or the Christmas tree of the Sunday-school or the week day school, as it is a most satisfactory one to select from.

GEORGE W. JACOBS & COMPANY are not without one of the popular animal books so much in fashion just at present. "Trixsey's Travels" is designed for a child, the information it contains being imparted in a bright, chatty style. Trixsey is a little tame gray squirrel, who has never known anything of life outside of his cage, when one day his little mistress leaves his cage door open, and he scampers away to the woods. All that he sees there is new and wonderful to him. He learns not only of the habits and life of the great squirrel family, but also of the rabbit, the hare, the fox, the ground hog, and other inhabitants of the woods. The animals all have the gift of speech and carry on most improving conversations with Trixsey. The author is Emily Paret Atwater whose stories of "Tommy's Adventures" and "How Sammy Went to Coral-Land" are permanent additions to young people's libraries. This is an issue of The Lad and Lassie Series. a collection of prettily made little books and original stories by favorite writers, that are most acceptable to children. A similar series on similar lines is the Little Maid Series, to which has just been added "Little Grandmother Jo," by Amy E. Blanchard to whose credit exist stories innumerable, "Little Grandmother Jo," is Eleanor Dallas's Grandmother and it is she who relates the story of her own school life of fifty years ago to her little granddaughter. The severe training of a half century ago is contrasted with the happy school life of to-day with its many pleasures and indulgences—the narrative however is not without gay episodes of his own. Also in the Little Maid Series is another story for girls by Louise Regina Baker, entitled "Mrs. Pinner's Little Girl." The interest centres in a charming little family made orphans, Mary, the elder, a girl of ten years, being adopted by the Pinners, rich, middleaged people, who have lost their own child of that age. They are very good to her, and Mary learns to love them, but her big, tender sympathetic heart yearns for her little sisters and brothers, and she finds it impossible to be happy. Mrs. Pinner, who is a real mother to the sweet little girl, gratifies her wish at last, and sends for the little ones and Mary rejoices in a re-united family. The child's character is a fine study in gentleness and true goodness. In "Dolly's Theatricals," by D. Gwyn Jefferies, five clever children undertake to write and present a little play in honor of their mothers' birthday. They have many strange experiences and funny mishaps, brightly and humorously written up.

JOHN LANE COMPANY offer to the children of today a dainty volume of poetical masques and little plays that gave great pleasure to the English children of thirty years and more ago. "Lilliput Revels" and "Innocents' Island" are products of the pen of W. B. Rand, having been published in 1870 and 1872, in the English periodical Good Words for the Young. The "Revels" consists of a number of fanciful plays, in which little children and characters from fairy land appear. "Innocents' Island" is a child's story in verse, told in most attractive measures. The little book as now sent out, with these literary efforts, has been edited by R. Brimley Johnson, and somewhat abbreviated, though not to the detriment of the delightful material, nothing that is essential to the story or really charming as poetry having been left out. The quaint conceits of the little plays, or "revels," are delightfully interpreted by Griselda Wedderburn in page pictures as original and poetical as the text. "Peterkins, the Story of a Dog," should also be mentioned, written by Ossip Schubin and translated by Mrs. Lane, and "A Year of Songs for a Baby in a Garden," by William Graham Robertson, who is both author and illustrator. Walter Crane's artistic picture pooks are always in order—no Christmas tree or Christmas stocking is complete without "Mother Hubbard," "Cinderella," "The Little Pigs," or one other of the old nursery tales.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY have made such rich provision for young people, big and little, that one hard'y knows what to select. Boys who like adventure properly seasoned with romance will find "Viva Christina," by Edith E. Cowper, entirely satisfying. It is the story of a brave young Scot who joined the British Legion in Spain and helped to put down the Carlist uprising. An English girl and a Spanish maid, as beautiful as she is mysterious, offer chances a-plenty for chivalric deeds. Equally exciting are the experiences of two English boys who fight the white-turbaned Hindu in India as recounted in George Manville Fenn's "Shoulder Arms," English school life is the background of "The Boys of Badminster," wherein Andrew Home unravels the mystery of a case of mistaken identity with a plot for kidnapping included: and in G. I. Whitham's "The White Coats" Cavaliers and Roundheads are involved in the fortunes of two boy cousins, plucky youngsters who are not too young to play their part in the Civil War. For those young people who want to find out the whys and wherefores of life, the Lippincotts offer varied answers, combining simple yet accurate information. Archibald Williams follows up his successful books on exploration and steam locomotion by two others, entitled "The Romance of Modern Mechanism" and "The Romance of Modern Mining." The former is a readable, intensely interesting account of modern mechanical inventions and devices, while the second tells of the thrilling exploits of the workers underground. Charles R. Gibson contributes a kindred work, "The Romance of Electricity," in which he makes clear the wonder-working force which has revolution-ized modern life. Nature lovers will find space on their bookshelves for "The Romance of Insect Life," by Edmund Selous, and Agnes Gimighty Deep," the latter being an elaboration of a wellknown work. Mention should also be made of the excellent illustrations found in all these "Romance" books. As girls are, secretly, as fond of adventures as their brothers, they will hail with delight "Little Miss Robinson Crusoe," a tale of a brave fourteen-year-old girl who is cast on a tropical island, where she has to devise for herself means of shelter, food and protection, and incidentally finds rich jewels and later other human survivors of the wreck. Mrs. George Corbett is the author of this story, as well as "The Adventures of Princess Daintipet," the fan-ciful experiences of a little royal maid in a fairy forest, where the trees grow bread and butter. "Wilful Cousin Kate," by that beloved of authors, Laura T. Meade, tells of a headstrong, intense girl who finds life very complex when she is sent to live with London cousins during the absence of her idolized invalid mother. Later she saves her mother's life, but almost loses her best reward. May Baldwin's "The Girls of St. Gabriel's" gives an excellent picture of school life in France, introducing also a glimpse of a beautiful old chateau and its inmates; and, by way of contrast, there is "Crab Cottage," in which Raymond Jacberns unfolds the history of two families of young people engaged in poultry raising in England. History has been drawn upon by J. F. M. Carter for the setting and incidents of "Diana Polworth, Royalist," since it is the story of a girl's life in the days of the Commonwealth. Short stories are always welcome, especially such as are found in Brown Linnett's "The Kidnapping of Ettie;" and who will dare say there can ever be too many editions of the wonderful "Grimm's Fairy Tales"? This new edition, translated by Mrs. Edgar Lucas and pictured by Arthur Rackham, is an uncommonly attractive volume. Thousands of children will also be charmed to receive this year's "Wallypug" book, in which Mr. Farrow continues the adventures of this extraordinary and amusing creature in the moon, where things underanned of by every-day mortals befall His Highness. The illustrations are as funny as the text, and that is the highest praise.

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY, in preparing their holiday list, evidently have taken into consideration the interest common to us all in the lives and exploits of other real human beings, since four of their leading juveniles deal with persons who have actually lived and wrought. Around the childhood of eight celebrated men-poets, artists and musicians, like Byron, Gainsborough and Handel, have been woven stories based on fact and only colored with imagination. These "Boys Who Became Famous Men," as portrayed by Harriet P. Skinner, are a very companionable, entertaining company. Likewise absorbing as fiction are the narratives presented in Jennie Hall's "Men of Old Greece," in which the lives of Leonidas, Themistocles, Socrates and Phideas are told with the culminating event in the career of each. Heroism and love of country shine forth in "Heroes of Iceland." Years ago Sir George Webbe Dasent translated into English the great Icelandic saga, "The Story of Burnt Njal," and it is this saga that Allen French has taken and recast in more simple form, while retaining all of its vivid reality. It is a tale of Iceland in the tenth century, introducing actual personages, and showing the pursuits and customs of those sturdy, courageous Norsemen at the time of the coming of Christianity. Heroism enters wholly into "With Spurs of Gold," by Frances N. Greene and Dolly W. Kirk, who tell tales of the brave old days of chivalry and of those knights, Roland and Oliver, the Cid and Chevalier Bayard, Richard Cœur de Lion and Sir Philip Sidney, who made their times glorious. The New World is the scene of William Henry Johnson's "French Pathfinders in North America," and if the exploits of Cartier, La Salle, Champlain and many others were less picturesque than those of the knights of Middle Age Europe, the bravery, determination and daring shown by them can never be excelled. Mr. Johnson gives a graphic and comprehensive account of the earliest explorations and settle-ments of the French in this country, and of the Indians, hostile and Wells Smith has seized upon historical events as the setting of "The Boy Captive in Capacle" Boy Captive in Canada," wherein the experiences of little Stephen Williams, the son of the Deerfield minister, are recounted, his wanderings as a captive with the Indians in Vermont and Canada after the massacre of Deerfield, and his happy release. The book is quite up to the author's "The Boy Captive of Old Deerfield," to which it is a sequel. Exceedingly modern boys figure in "Shipwrecked in Greenland, by Arthur R, Thompson, a story of perils and rescues of stranded travellers in Greenland and along the Labrador coast. Quite different in tone is Helen Leah Reed's "Amy in Arcadia," and if hairbreadth escapes give place to experiences more suitable to American and Canadian girls, the readers of the well-liked "Brenda" books will hardly object. In this story Miss Reed begins a new series, conducting the heroine and her friends to the romantic "Evangeline" country in Nova Scotia. Another writer dear to children of to-day is ready with a new holiday book. In "The Schoolhouse in the Woods" Miss Plympton gives a thoroughly natural picture of boys and girls at their lessons and at play—loving, teasing, wideawake youngsters, who make life a burden to a little darkey child simply because they do not think. Anna Chapin Ray, hav-ing completed her "Teddy" books, greatly to the regret of hosts of boys and girls who have become absorbingly interested in the doings of the McAlister family, now introduces in

"Sidney: Her Summer on the St. Lawrence" an entirely new set of characters. Sidney Stayre is a most likable girl, so her cousins find out when she comes to visit them in their St. Lawrence cottage, and it is amazing how much help and courage she gives to her boy cousin, ten years her senior, who is threatened with lung trouble. There are some mischievous little tots who add their quota to the summer's fun. The lover of dogs—and who is not?-will derive much amusement from "The Reform of Shaun" and its companion story, "Mystic and His Mas-ter," by Allen French; while budding naturalists are sure to find "Wilderness Babies," by Julia A. Schwartz, the very book they want, with its quaintly told tales of the opossum, the whale, the beaver, the bear and numerous others. No list is complete without a volume of fairy tales, so here is "The Oak-Tree Fairy Book," containing many old favorites which the editor, Clifton Johnson, has shorn of some barbarous details of cruelty and evil doings. Willard Bonte has added some charming pic-tures. For several seasons Miss Alcott's dearly loved stories have been reissued one by one in fitting manner, pleasingly illustrated and attractively bound. This year this edition is completed by the addition of "Un-der the Lilacs," pictured by Alice Barber Ste-phens, and "Jack and Jill," with Harriet Jill," Roosevelt Richards's illustrations, both bound in uniform style. Another new edition of an other new edition of an old favorite of many girl readers is M. E. Waller's "A Daughter of the Rich," newly illustrated by Ellen B. Thompson. The Boys' Thompson. The Boys' and Girls' Bookshelf has a number of attractive additions this year. "Nan's Chicopee Children" is a story of outdoors and playtimes by Myra S. Hamlin; "As the Goose Flies," by Katharine Pyle, is a pretty fairy story; "The Little Red Schoolhouse" and "A Cape May Diamond," both by Evelyn Raymond; "More Bed-Time Stories," by Louise Chandler Moulton; and "Blake Redding," by Natalie R. Clark, are all tales of boys and girls at work and play, in mischief and well out of it.

Longmans, Green & Company have in Andrew Lang an apparently inexhaustible font of romance and fairy lore. They add this year the seventeenth volume to their world-famed Fairy Book Series, representative not only of Mr. Lang's industry and research along the highways and byways of the world's literature, but also of that of Mrs. Lang, his faithful collaborator. "The Red Romance Book," in line with its gayly bound predecessors, is designed for the recreation of young people. All the stories in the book were done out of the old romances by Mrs. Lang, as the editor, Mr. Lang, asserts in his preface where he explains "to children and others" what romances are. "We have made," he says further, "the old romances much shorter, keeping the liveliest parts, in which curious things happen. Some of the tales were first told in Iceland eight hundred years ago, and are mostly true and about real people. Some are from the ancient French romances of the adventures of Charlemagne, and his peers and paladins. Some are from later Italian poems of the same kind. 'Cupid and Psyche' is older, and so is the story of the man who was changed into a donkey. These are from an old Latin romance, written when people were still hea-thens, most of them. Some are about the Danes in England, but there is not much history in them." Mrs. Lang says: "In this book you will read of men, who, like Don Quixote, were often mistaken but never mean, and of women, such as Una and Bradamante, who kept patient and true, in spite of fierce trials and temptations." This pleasant assurance might stand as an endorsement of all the volumes of the Fairy Book Series, which can with confidence be placed in the hands of the young In all the bravery of its red and gold livery, and its prodigal array of illustrations in colors and black and white, the work is a delight to the eye, as well as food for the imagination. "The Red Romance Book" promises to sustain fully the reputabook profines to statum than the child's tion of its fellow volumes. Another child's book with many ancestors of renown is "The Golliwogg's Fox-Hunt," by Bertha and Florence K. Upton, depicting the blackbrowed Golliwogg and his "girls," on horseback and in riding costumes following the hounds. Their "run across the country" has many ludicrous accidents, which have full justice done them by the artist and verse maker. This is one of the books all children who know the "Golliwogg's" beginnings are impatiently waiting for. It is rich in laughs, and will bear many inspections.

LOTHROP, LEE & SHEPARD COMPANY make generous contributions to the good cheer and happy holiday feeling of the season. Girls and boys have both been thought of in their and boys have both been thought of in their delightful list of stories by American writers, known wherever children are found on this great continent. A "leader" among girls' books is "When Grandmamma Was Fourteen." Here Mrs. Terhune, better known as "Marion Harland," tells the story of her life in Richmond, where, as a girl of fourteen, she attended school before our Civil War. The lights and shadows are artistically mingled, the book being both amusing and pathetic. Her own love affair, and that of her chum Sidney, a girl of sixteen, with other episodes of a different variety, such as come into the lives of most school girls, continues a narrative begun so auspiciously in "When Grandmamma Was New," both examples of Marion Harland's most charming manner. "Dolly's Double," by Ethel Wood, and "Laura in the Mountains," by Henrietta R. Eliot, are both for smaller girls. The first is about two little girls who bear a striking re-semblance to each other. There is a mys-tery, which is cleared up, and "lots" of good times at the seaside and in the country. The second book has a heroine already met with in "Laura's Holidays." In this story a sprightly account is given of a camping out experience in the Oregon woods. In the detailed record presented through the later Pepper looks of the sayings and doings of the "Little Brown House" family, it was quite impossible that Ben, "the quiet, steady-as-a-tock boy," should be omitted. So Margaret Sidney has put this eldest-born of Mother Pepper's brood into a book as chief character, the title naturally being "Ben Pepper," and the volume the tenth of the famous Pepper books. Although Ben was given to effacing himself, he had plenty of fun in him, and an unusually bright mind. Ben had no wish to be a hero, and if he had been listened to no book would have been written, but Polly and Joel and David and Phronsie helped Margaret Sidney accomplish her purpose by lovingly telling her the facts with which the book is strewn. A story of Bunker Hill may be sought within the covers of "Dan Monroe." W. O. Stoddard begins with it a well-planned series-the Revolutionary Series—the hero being one whose name is found in several trustworthy records as the drummer boy of the Lexington militia, his closest friend, Nat Herrington, being the fifer. The Concord fight, the battle of Bunker Hill, and the arrival of Washington are introduced as parts of a carefully preserved historical outline. A splendid gift for any boy or young man "The Making of a Man," by Dr. Orison Swett Marden, a succession of talks on courage, success and honor and kindred topics, inspiring and helpful. "American Heroes and Heroines for Boys and Girls," by Fauline Carrington Bouvé, including sketches of Molly Pitcher. Paul Iones, Dolly Madison, Daniel Boone, and other famous Americans. "The Runaway Donkey, and Other Rhymes for Children," by Emilie Poulsson, is an ideal book for both home and kindergartens. It tells in illustrated rhymes more about the tricksy donkey Barney Gray, and also narrates the doings of various birds and beasts in a way to please the fancy and arouse the sympathy of children, while gratifying their love of animals. Notable additions have been made to almost every one of their popular juvenile series, the boys being specially favored. "At the Fall of Port vored. "At the Fall of Port Arthur" is another of Edward Stratemeyer's spirited war stories and the third volume in the Soldiers of Fortune Series. It relates, primarily, the adventures of Larry Russell, so well known to countless thousands of readers of the famous Old Glory Series. He joins the Japanese navy, and under Admiral Togo assists at the bombardment of Port Arthur. Life in the Japanese navy is described in detail. The fifth volume of the Colonial Scries, "The Fort in the Wilderness," and "Dave Porter at Oak Hall" are both also by Edward Stratemeyer. "The Fort in the Wilderness" is a fine tale of colonial days and the noted Indian warrior Pontiac. A large portion of the action takes place at Detroit and around the Great Lakes. A typical American schoolboy, a manly, thoroughly up-to-day boy, is delineated in Dave Porter, whose fortunes will in succeeding volumes take him to adventures in distant lands. "The Boy Pathfinder," by William C. Sprague, has as hero an actual character, George Shannon, a Pennsylvania lad, who at seventeen left school to become one of the Lewis and Clark expedition. He had narrow escapes, but persevered, and the story of his wanderings, interwoven with excellent historical information, makes the highest type of general reading for the young. This is the second volume of the Making of Our Nation Series, of which the first volume is "The Boy Courier of Napoleon." A story of reaping good by doing good, bright and entertaining and full of life, incident and good sense has been conceived by Emma Lee Benedict in "The Gregory Emma Lee Benedict in "The Gregory Guards," a boys' club, so-called, whose members are privileged to pass the summer at a rich young man's home on an island near New York. "The Scarlet Patch" is the story of a patriot boy in the Mohawk Valley, told by Mrs. Mary E. Q. Brush, full of thrilling scenes in which a faithful Indian figures prominently. The third volume of the Phillips-Exeter Series is "In the Line," by A. T. Dudley. As his first book, "Following the Ball," gives the fortunes of a player in the back field in connection with his general school life, so "In the Line" tells how a stalwart young student won his position at guard and at the same time made equally marked progress in the building of character. Plenty of jolly companions contribute a strong humorous element, and the book has every essential of a favorite. "The Boy Craftsman" is recommended to every boy, for every real boy wishes to design and make things. He will find this book one of the very best yet offered for the number of practical and profitable ideas which go to the limit of any con-struction. A. Neely Hall is the author. "Helen Grant at Aldred House" follows this attractive young heroine to the end of her school days, and depicts her gradual unfolding to an enthusiastic young womanhood. Amanda M. Douglas makes this the third volume of her Helen Grant Series. Miss Douglas's book is for older girls, the ones that follow appeal to much younger readers. "How Barbara Kept Her Promise," by Nina Rhoades, tells of the devotion of Barbara, aged twelve, to her little sister Hazel, who is "only eight." They are little English orphans, who are sent from their early home in London to their mother's family in New York. "Cordelia's Pathway Out," by Edna A. Foster, traces the development of quiet Cordelia, who appeared first in the author's story of "Hortense." "Randy's Luck," the sixth in of "Hortense." "Randy's Luck," the sixth in succession of The Randy Books, by Amy Brooks, shows Randy's power for winning and holding friends. The same author sends out her fourth volume in the Dorothy Dainty Series, entitled "Dorothy Dainty at the Shore," depicting happy days at the beach with jolly companions. "My Little Lady in Waiting" is the story of a little girl left quite alone in the world in the tenement house district of New York-she goes through many trials, finally springing from a patient drudge to high honors. At fourteen the author, Louise E. Catlin, leaves her a happy "little lady in waiting" with prospects of a brilliant future.

A. C. McClurg & Company have ready an exquisite fairy story, compounded of the stuff that dreams are made of, by Mrs. Edith Ogden Harrison. "The Moon Princess" is a happy successor to "The Star Fairies" and "Prince Silverwings," books that made children happy some years ago. Again Mrs. Lucy F. Perkins depicts in many softest-toned illustrations the fairy history of this Moon-Princess, who, on her marriage to Prince Dorion, begs one boon of her mother, that she may be allowed to spend her honeymoon (though one is sure Mrs. Harrison does not intend to pun) on the earth. The wish being granted, the bride and her prince descend to the earth, where they have all sorts of surprising adventures, meeting the Rainbow Sisters, Princess Sunset, the fairies who are now mocking birds, and the black dwarf, by whom the Moon Princess is taken prisoner. All this Mrs. Harrison describes in simple, unaffected style, weaving in many dainty conceits. More fairy lore may be found in J. Allen St. John's "The Face in the Pool," revolving around the person of a beautiful beleaguered princess who can only be rescued by some prince courageous enough to overcome the most appalling obstacles interposed by wicked fairy. Eventually the man appears, he who sees "the face in the pool," and they marry and live happy ever after, in correct fairy story style. Mr. St. John is happy in being able to furnish capital illustrations for his book. Events quite as extraordinary as any that occur in fairyland are recounted by Millicent E. Mann in "Lady Dear." Juanita is "Lady Dear's" real name, and her father is a brave soldier with

The little maid, left behind in the care of servants in the half-ruined castle, is visited by a baron, a bold, bad man, who has designs on the property. "Lady Dear" only stands in his way, so that it is fortunate indeed for her that the baron's jester takes pity on her and with great eleverness rescues on her and with great cleverness rescues her and secretly conducts her to Queen Isabella's court many miles away. Mrs. Mann holds one's interest from first to last in this winning Spanish girl, a worthy daughter of her father. Cat tales are always welcome, the more so when they introduce us to such a wise kitten as "Tommy Postoffice," so named because of his adventures in the Hartford postoffice. Gabrielle E. Jackson is responsible for this true story; while another animal book, "Adventures in Pondland," is by that well-known English writer, Frank L. Stevens. Here may be had accurate descriptions worked into story form of the denizens of the pond-the water-spider, newts, dragon-flies, beetles, etc., pictured in many illustrations and familiar to us all since paddling days. Also for the serious-minded child is M. Louise Putnam's "Children's Life of Lincoln," in its New Revised Edition, containing some new matter not found in the 15,000 odd copies that have been sold all over the country. That attractive series, Life Stories for Young People, made up of short, simple biographies by standard foreign writers, translated by George P. Upton, this year is increased by volumes on Maria Theresa, Bach, the Little Dauphin and Frederick the Great. The McClurgs have also decided to issue that popular and most amusing book by G. Zollinger, "The Widow O'Callaghan's Boys," in a New Holiday Edition. Florence Scovel Shinn's excellent illustrations in color furnish characteristic glimpses of those incorrigible young people. To older boys and girls Calvin D. Wilson's "Making the Most of Ourselves" will give a deal of help. Hints are given for reading and listening, for manners and conduct-helpful practical thoughts that will be of inestimable value to young people.

THE "SHOW" WAS A TREMENDOUS SUCCESS.

McLoughlin Brothers have about as varied a selection of attractive books for children as can be imagined. They have this year a veritable treasure in "McLoughlin's Christmas Annual," edited by Matilda Blair. The book is bright and cheerful in get-up, and generous in contents—in fact it is made up of three or four books, the matter being classified under the headings of "Christmas in Story," "Christmas in Song," "Christmas in Story," "Christmas in Song," "Christmas Games" and "Historical Tales." They have also recently brought out three useful collections, by the same compiler, entitled "Wee Picces for Wee Speakers and Some Older Children," "The Ideal Speaker for Young People" and "The Nonpareil Reader and Speaker." These books will be welcomed by teachers and parents for their fresh material graded for all ages. Each volume is illustrated and attractively printed and bound. The Young Folks Standard Library, containing so many of the old standbys this year adds twelve volumes from new plates to its list, including such favorites as "Treasure Island," "Grandfather's Chair," "Black Beauty," "Christmas Carols," and others. Then there are "Recitation Books"; new "Colored Toy Books"; "Picture Blocks"; "Games," "Scroll Puzzles" and every kind of invention to delight the hearts of the youngest children.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY have in Ernest Ingersoll's "The Island in the Air" something quite out of the line of hackneyed adventure. Travelling over the plains to the gold fields of California, fifty years or more ago, with all the delightful paraphernalia of the emigrant wagons, tents and so on, a band of young people, through a terrible water-spout, are separated from their elders, and the narrative is left in their hands to the end of the book. Brave and these resourceful youngsters prove themselves in the face of Indians, bears, wolves and cougars and other fearful objects, animate and inani-mate, and remain jolly and hopeful until their soldier father is again met. Also on their list of books for the young is "Tales of the Fish Patrol," by Jack London. When a boy of sixteen Jack London was a member of the Fish Patrol in San Francisco Bay and its environs. He was even then a splendid fighter and a first-rate small-boat sailor. He has made a book of his encounters and those of his chum, Charley Le Grant, with the law-breaking Greeks and Italians and Chinese of that great region. These narratives are as spirited and as full af entertainment as anything we have had from the author of "The Call of the Wild." An admirable translation has been made of Max Nordau's charming stories for children, by Mary J. Safford, under the title "The Dwart's Spectacles, and Other Fairy Tales." With its author's fame and its rich gallery of illustrations it should be one of the most attractive juveniles of the season. New cheaper editions of Laura Winnington's "The Outlook Fairy Book" and "The Outlook Story Book" appeal to all who appreciate the best in this line of literature. They are admirably suited to the wants of the very youngest.

Moffat, Yard & Company present the most remarkable menagerie of new species ever brought together in John P. Benson's "Woozlebeasts." What is a "woozlebeast" is the most natural question that springs to the mquiring mind, seeking knowledge. We are sorry to say we cannot describe a "woozlebeast," as it is like nothing ever seen on sea or land, being entirely the creature of Mr. Benson's fertile imagination. If you are seeking a hearty laugh, buy "The Woozlebeasts," it will fill in the whole winter with ample merriment, as the family gathers around the open fire. The drawings are in black and white and often in black or tint; the verses descriptive of the beasts are as original as the designs. For the boys especially is "Our Army for Our Boys," by H. A. Ogden and Tudor Jenks. Mr. Ogden who has executed for the War Department an extensive series or large pictures illustrating, in exact color and detail, the uniforms of the army from its beginning to the present time, offers to American boys in this book the pictorial development of history of the growth and development of the American army. The numerous carefully studied plates are in full color, covering in popular composiground to that of his costly official series. The text, by Tudor Jenks, for years an editor on the staff of St. Nicholas, is an admirable combination of accurate information and interesting narrative, based on extensive study of the subject from original sources. "The Story Bible" belongs to a class that never outlives its charm or usefulness. Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster here retells with deep reverence the old Bible tales consecutively from Genesis to Revelation, covering the entire Scripture within the compass of a child's interest and patience. The publishers believe that this will be, for years to come, a standard book in the homes of many thousands. It is beautifully illustrated with twelve fullpage drawings in colors. The Centenary Edition of "The Ugly Duckling," by Hans Christian Andersen, is an exquisite edition of this celebrated tale, illustrated by color and in black and white by M. H. Squire.

Munn & Company make a notable addition to the already long list of books teaching a boy "how to make something." It is a work by A. Russell Bond, under the title "The Scientific American Boy." It contains matter which is distinctly different from the ordinary, such as bridge building, surveying, heliographing, and the like, subjects which have heretofore been deemed too difficult for a boy to understand. In the present work, however, these subjects have been very simply dealt with. The bridges include half a dozen types described in such manner that any American hoy of average intelligence can build them. Directions are given for making a surveying instrument and a heliograph instrument, and the instructions for using them are very simple. Other subjects covered by this book are how to build a windmill, a water wheel, a gravity railroad. The boy camper is given directions for making such shelters as tents, sleeping bags, tree houses, log cabins, straw huts and caves. Among the winter diversions six kinds of skate sails and eight kinds of snow shoes and skis are fully described, besides sledges, toboggans, scooters, and ice boats. The book also contains a large number of miscellaneous devices, such as scows, canoes, land yachts, and the like. For the purpose of making the subject-matter more interesting to boys, a narrative is used for connecting together the various incidents.

Thomas Nelson & Sons are the publishers of one of the most popular of children's annuals—"Sunday." The volume for 1906 is made up entirely of new reading matter and new illustrations, and makes a fine display in delightful stories and poetry for old and young. "One Hundred Bible Stories," by Robert Bird, is a collection of stories written for children too small to understand the Bible when they hear it, but are quite ready to listen to the same thing told at greater length in simple words, with such touches as every parent makes use of to hold his children's attention. The Nelsons are rich in toy books in stiff paper bindings and quartos in gay board bindings, ranging in prices from five cents to thirty cents. Plenty of pictures with subjects of which children never tire, that is pet animals, little ones at play, alphabets, etc., with simple, merry text, and all the colors of the rainbow inside and outside, are the leading characteristics of all this stock. The buyers of Christmas presents need just such pretty books for the denizens of the nursery and for church celebrations where a Christmas tree is the central interest.

L. C. Page & Company as usual have ready an attractive variety of stories to tempt the modern critical child. During the past few years we have been learning to like better and better a young girl from Kentucky, called from her resemblance to her soldierly grandfather, the "Little Colonel." This year Annic Fellows Johnston in "The Little Colonel's Christmas Vacation" presents us to this winsome girl when she is studying at a most inviting boarding-school on the banks of the Potomac, known as War-wick Hall. The forty girls have no end of natural good times together in this stately old place; so when it is decided after the Christmas vacation at home that the "Little Colonel" is not strong enough to return to school, she feels at first that life is without any motive. At length, however, she throws herself into the hopes, trials, and interests of her neighbors and proves she can live up to the ideals she has formed. Some old friends, more than welcome, reappear these pages. Another excellent story for girls, with a helpful moral lesson skilfully concealed, is Jane S. Woodruff's "The Roses of Saint Elizabeth." It is laid in Martin Luther's town of Eisenach and pictures the simple life of a German boy and girl, one of whom goes out into the big world to seek knowledge. Very different obstacles, undreamed of by this sixteenth century boy, were met by the manly young hero of Burton E. Stevenson's Burton E. Stevenson's "The Young Section Hand." He also has his way to make, and he begins it by taking a position as section hand in a western railroad. He is annoyed and perse-cuted by the discharged employee whose place he has taken, and has perilous adventures, narrow escapes and much hard work before promotion rewards him. There is mostly play and precious little work in "The Ri-val Campers," wherein Ruel P. Smith tells the adventures, surprising and exciting, of two parties of boys on an island off the Maine coast. A burglar chase and cap-ture give the finishing touch to a perfect vacation, so the boy campers think, and boy readers will agree with them. Aside from the "Little Colonel" book Mrs. Johnston has two other pretty stories, half fairy tale, half legend, entitled "In the Desert of Waiting" and "The Three Weavers." Each is daintily bound and decorated, and each has a lesson to teach those who are clever enough to find it out. And, by the way, there is a Special Holiday Edition of Mrs. Johnston's charming "Two Little Knights of Kentucky," to stand side by side with last season's Holiday Edition of "The Little Colonel." The fine colored illustrations by Harold M. Brett will make very vivid the exploits of these young Knights of the Round Table. Encouraged by the welcome given last year to four separate stories culled from Charles G. D. Roberts's store of animal lore, this house has decided to issue two more tales, accompanied by Charles Livingston Bull's delightful drawings and bound in similar style. These are "The Little People of the Sycamore," telling of the raccoons, and "The Return to the Trails," a bear story. It remains to make mention of the additions to two deservedly popular series. The Little Cousin's Series this year opens its covers to "Our Little Armenian Cousin," by Mary H. Wade, "Our Little English Cousin" and "Our Little French Cousin," by Blanche McManus, "Our Little Korean Cousin," by H. Lee M. Pike, and "Our Little Mexican Cousin," by Edward C. Butler. There are seven new volumes in the Cosy Corner Series, viz., "Flip's Islands of Providence," by Mrs. Johnston; "The Great Scoop," by Molly Elliott Seawell: "Down in Dixie," by Will A. Dromgoole: "A Little Puritan Cavalier," by Edith Robinson; "Theodore and Theodora." by Marian W. Wildman; "John Whopper," by Bishop Clark; and "How Christmas Came to the Mulvaneys," by Frances M. THE PENN PUBLISHING COMPANY divide their good things about equally between girls and boys-four stories for the one, four for the others. All these publications are instructive, having an element of travel or history outside of their little romance that gives them an abiding place on the library shelf. The strange "hermit nation," with its odd people and odd costumes, is the scene of "An American Girl in Korea," by Annie M. Barnes. A party of young people under the care of their elders go to Korea to study the country. One of the young girls is the heroine of an unusual episode, getting herself imprisoned in the underground of a monastery by Buddhist priests, whose mysterious rites she witnesses. California forms a picturesque background to "Polly, the Gringo," by Evelyn Raymond. The story follows the fortunes of a small girl from Maine, who travels to San Francisco alone in pursuit of her father and mother. The time is before California became a State, when the Spanish applied the term "gringo" to all Americans. "Betty Wales, Sophomore," by Margaret Warde, continues the young life of a heroine dear to youthful readers, hearts the some contents. readers' hearts, she seems so real and inspires an interest so warm and a sympathy so tender. Those who knew Betty Wales as a freshman will be eager to learn of her doings during her second year at college. She and her friends are the same jolly, high-spirited group as formerly, and most creditable representa-tives of the American college girl. "Mar-jorie's Way," by Alice Turner Curtis, is for younger girls than the former story. The narrative has for its central figure a girl of twelve who has several laudable ambitions that she succeeds in accomplishing. Stories of adventure and daring deeds have been prepared for the boys. How two brothers carried themselves bravely through unexpected difficulties is the theme of "The Boynton Pluck," by Helen Ward. "The Lost Expedition," by W. Bert Foster, relates the miraculous escape from death of a professor and his two young companions, who happened to be lost on a glacier in Alaska." "Fighting King George" is a tale of the American Revolution and '76. John T. McIntyre, who writes it, gives a chapter of history boys are apt to know little about. The hero, Tom Deering, was one of "Marion's Men," and Deering, was one of "Marion's Men," and saw service also under Greene and Gates. Captain Paul B. Malone, of the U. S. Army, has sent out another book relative to his hero, Douglas Atwell, who won his cadetship by his bravery in a Philippine campaign. He calls it "A Plebe at West Point," and throws some light on the hazing incidents there, so much discussed a few years ago. Captain Malone has taught at West Point, and knows thoroughly of what he writes.

PILGRIM PRESS have two excellent new juveniles among their Christmas publications. "Hobby Camp," by Frank H. Sweet, is a story of life in a woodland camp, where all rode their interesting hobbies and managed to learn much natural history through many interesting incidents; and "A Misunderstood Hero," by Mary Barnes Beale, is a story of the Southern mountains, the misunderstood hero being a bashful and somewhat morbid youth who proves his genuine heroism in many quiet ways, which finally compel recognition from his surroundings. He is a manly little hero, and it will do every child good to read about him.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS have only one book for young people, but they have chosen wisely in this one. It is a tale of rattling adventure, such as boys like, set against a historical background. "The Adventures of Harry Rochester," by Herbert Strang, recounts what befel a manly, courageous English boy under twenty, who in some mysterious way has incurred the enmity of a rich English squire. But Rochester, after being rescued from a slave ship, manages to get to Holland, where he is employed by a kindhearted Dutch merchant. But his native daring involves him in various adventures, including the rescue of some unprotected women of quality; cue of some unprotected women of quality; and he eventually is enrolled in the army of the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene, playing his part in the war of the Spanish Succession. A pretty love story adds romance to all the fighting and a happy ending clears away the mystery of Rochester's family connection and makes him a wealthy English landowner.

THE REILLY & BRITTON COMPANY may count on an enthusiastic welcome for their Christmas novelty for littlest folks. any youngster's delight when he finds, tucked in on top of his stocking, a "real for true" little bookcase with real doors that open and latch, through the glass of which he can see six real little books, side by side! And when he opens the doors and takes out these tiny books, he finds that each contains a fairy story and many bright colored pictures as well as others in black and white, and that each has an introduction by L. Frank Baum, telling the origin of this Christmas Stocking Series, and is bound in covers decorated with holly leaves and berries in true Christmas style. For Santa Claus's deputies we explain that the miniature bookcase is made of Japanese wood veneer, the doors are glazed with transparent celluloid and that the titles of these six stories are "Fairy Tales from Andersen," "Fairy Tales from Grimm," "A Child's Visit to the Zoo," "Cinderella and the Sleeping Beauty," "The Night Before Christmas," and "Little Black Sambo." They may be had either in the miniature bookcase or put up in fancy boxes, two volumes to a box. No daintier, more novel gift can be found than this series. L. Frank Baum also has ready another of his inimitable juveniles, entitled "The Woggle-Bug Book," wherein are recounted in the author's most whimsical style the love affairs of the Woggle-Bug. The funniest of pictures by Ike Morgan and many colored decorations complete a mirth-provoking book. It is a tale oft told that another edition of "The Marvelous Land of Oz" is ready, and yet it is only by these frequent new printings that the demand can be niet.

FLEMING H. REVELL COMPANY have two books which in view of recent events in the Far East are most timely. They should be embraced in all young people's libraries, desiring to keep up to date. Belle M. Brain has written "All About Japan," a young people's history of Japan from the earliest days down to the present. The picturesque story of the little "Flowery Kingdom," with its wonderful development into a first-class power among nations, is depicted with rare skill and attractiveness, a great amount of information, historical and otherwise, being cleverly condensed within the covers of a small volume. A sister nation is the motive of "With Tommy Tompkins in Korea"—one whose life as a nation was seriously imperilled by the recent war. Dr. L. H. Underwood, the author of the book, has successfully aimed to portray life in Korea, through a vivid story. Although the central figures are Tommy Tompkins and his father and mother, native life is most graphically and humorously presented in connection with the experiences of this American family, entertainment and accurate information about things Korean being admirably blended. A dear little red-haired girl who rises above her sordid environment of life in an alley is the heroine of "Saint Cecilia of the Court." It is a story of irresistible pathos and humor, reproducing pictures of many sides of life in the whirling metropolis. The author is Isabella R. Hess. Charming poems of childhood by a famous lover of children make up "The Rock-a-Bye Book." William Sinclair Lord in a handsomely decorated quarto has brought together pretty verses and lullabies mothers will delight to read or sing to their little ones.

THE SAALFIELD PUBLISHING COMPANY have a lovely quarto by Frances Trego Montgomery, the favorite writer of the boys and girls, and it represents a true story, that is, it is in scenes and characters a reproduction of a real place and real people. "Frances and of a real place and real people. "Frances and the Irrepressibles at Buena Vista Farm" is its title and it is no doubt a chapter out of the author's life, she being the "Frances," the excited little girl, who heads a band of young people bound for a summer in the country. It is a real farm they go to, well stocked with horses and cows, pigs and guinea pigs, pigeons and fancy fowls of all kinds, and besides these there are dogs and cats wthout number, so that each child may have a pet The illustrations are taken from photographs of real boys and girls, and their various pets figure as large as life; the cuts are generously interwoven in the text, and there are many full pages. "Flower Babies," by Elizabeth May, the author of "Animal Life in Rhymes and Jingles," presents a handsome book for the little ones containing bright colored pictures on every page, showing over one hundred of the most common flowers of our land in their natural colors, while in the centre of the pages appear charming scenes of the children at play, each one in keeping with the flower verses, a most dainty little gift book, that should please any little man or woman fortunate enough to receive it. A few days spent at Christmas time in the home of Santa Claus is the central motive of Frances Trego Montgomery's "Christmas With Santa Claus." The little waifs that Santa Claus carries to the North Pole in his wonderful sleigh meet Mrs. Santa Claus, have a coast with a polar bear, and other exciting experiences. The three foregoing exciting experiences. The three foregoing books are flat books, handsome quartos in boards, with attractively colored covers and plenty of pictures. The same description applies to Burton Stoner's "Jim Crow Tales, collection of stories on the order of the Br'er Rabbit tales in which Jim Crow, a farmer's pet, tells about the doings of his friends, the fox, the beaver, the bear, the squirrel, the owl, and other denizens of the forest. Older people would find this delightful reading. The half-dozen twelvemos on the Saalfield list are especially for boys, having all the qualities that they find so fascinating. Adventure and travel characterize them all, and a popular author name is on every title page. "Captain Tip-Top" is by Fred E. Janette, being a story of Lake St. Clair and the Detroit River. It tells of smuggling and other unusual things, having a mystery well sustained to the end. It is presented as the diary of the captain of the sloop-yacht Tycoon. "Ramrod Jones," hunter and patriot, stands for a tale of the Texas revolution against Mexico, written by Robert Blalock and now set forth by Clinton Giddings Brown. Tales of Indians, robbers, mystery, patriotism and war all succeed each other in its exacting pages. St. George Rathborne, that special favorite of the boys, is down for four books, each one taking the reader to a different part of the world. The "Young Castaways" has two boy characters who find themselves marooned on a sand-key in the Caribbean. Two boys also take a trip through the Brazilian forest, and make a wonderful cruise "Down the Amazon" in a canvas canoe; "Adrift in a Junk" deals with boy sailors of the China Sea; and "Young Voyagers of the Nile" is a tale of a narrow escape from dervishes, Arabs, etc., while floating down the Nile. The boy that would not be satisfied with one of these prettily bound pooks would be hard to please.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS possess three books for younger readers of exceptional quality, representing three authors who have entwined themselves in the hearts of young and oid. Two have been silent for a longer period than any of us care to recall, hence a double welcome is extended to their productions. When Mrs. Burnett dramatized the story of dear little Sara Crewe under the title of "A Little Princess," her much adored heroine, rose on a new wave of popularity. Mrs. Burnett says in making her play, she found there were so many scenes and so many characters in Sara Crewe's story she had omitted, that it was necessary in answer to the demands of her many admirers to write a new story which is now published under the title "A Little Princess, being the whole story of Sara Crewe now told for the first time." It is a beautiful holiday book, with a dozen full-page illustrations in colors, by Ethel Franklin Betts. Equally beautiful is Howard Pyle's "Story of the Champions of the Round Table," which the author himself has illustrated in his own inimitable style. The adventures of Launcelot, Tristram, Percival and other chiefs of the various groups in King Arthur's court are dealt with in a manner at once spirited and poetic. The author of the "Mooswa" tales, Mr. W. A. Fraser, again relates animal stories under the title of "Sa-Zada Tales." which Arthur Hemming has illustrated. Tigers, elephants, panthers, and other equally ferocious creatures of the forests and jungles are carried through these pages in a series of most exciting adventures.

THE STITT PUBLISHING COMPANY have a large selection of books by popular authors. There is a new volume of the Rover Boys Series, telling of "The Rover Boys on the River," and their exciting search for a missing houseboat. It is by Arthur M. Winfield, who is also the author of "The Putnam Hall Cadets," a story of sport and hard work at a military school. "Bob the Photographer," again by Winfield, shows how even photography may demand courage and resource. It is good news to thousands of future voters that there is still another Henry book ready for Christmas holiday consumption. Its title is "Redskins and Colonists," being laid in Colonial Virginia when even the youngsters had to know how to defend themselves against treacherous foes. In "The Rival Divers," Ray Rockwood spins a thrilling sea yarn about sunken treasure and deep diving, while Captain Ralph Bonehill's "Lost in the Land of Ice" carries us to the South Pole where there are hair-raising experiences. A reprint edition of Charles G. D. Roberts's inimitable animal stories, "The Kindred of the Wild." will be suitable for either boy or girl, but L. T. Meade's "A Bevy of Girls" will only L. T. Meade's satisfy one of the author's many girl admirers. An ideal gift book is found in "Tales from Longfellow," wherein Doris Hayman and Frances Brundage retell in prose some of the poet's loveliest verse. The volume is prettily bound and is illustrated by half-tone and colored pictures.

Frederick A. Stokes Com-PANY never forget the children, and have remembered them with even more than their usual lavish generosity this year, if such a thing were possible. Every child has heard papa and mamma and all who came to them talk of the dreadful war in Japan, and they have often wondered what kind of little girls and boys must be in that country on the other side of this round earth. This is all explained to them in "Japanese Child Life." for which verses and stories full of interest and information have been written by Alice Calhoun Haines, who did such charming work last year in "The Book of the Dog" and "Pets," and for which Alice Mar has made eight full-page illustrations in color, showing the little Japs at work selling flowers, painting lanterns, gathering fruit blossoms and learning their lessons. Every child who has read S. R. Crockett's "Sir Toady Lion" will be overjoyed to get his "Sir Toady Crusoe," for it is the first time this rare author has talked to the children for several years, and Gordon Browne has illustrated his new story; a fascinating collection of stories a hundred years old is gathered by E. V. Lucas in "Old Fashioned Tales," and illustrated by F. D. Bedford; N. Hudson Moore in "Children of Other Days" has made attractive reproductions of famous pictures of children with stories to make them even more interesting to children; Edith Dunham has written the text for a remarkable series of photographs, showing the methods of transportation of goods and passengers in all parts of the world, which is called "Jogging Round the World;" and Mrs. Knipe, who in "The Child" two years back gave us so beautiful and original a pleasure, has now made pictures for "Girls and Boys," four of each, and they are all pictured in colors with all her old art. Alice Calhoun Haines has furnished verses and stories to inspire Mrs. Knipe. Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures" and "Through the Looking Glass" are brought out with all the old illustrations and twelve new ones in colors by Maria L. Kirke, and these two volumes in a pretty box will make as satisfactory a gift as they did when Lewis Carroll's stroke of genius set the whole world afire more than a generation ago. For children quite a little younger are fitted "Stokes's Children's Annual," always full of stories, verses and about 200 illustrations, many of them in colors; and The Christmas Stocking, Series, really made to slip into the stocking, in which the new volumes are "Con, the Wizard," by John H. Jewett; and "The Denim Elephant," profusely illustrated in color. Who has not laughed over Buster Brown, Foxy Grandpa and Sanmy Sneeze, and what child will not be glad to have those heroes for himself to keep instead of in his father's newspaper? Choose for him R. F. Outcault's "Tige, His Story," or "Buster Brown's Pranks," or Winsor McKay's "Little Sammy Sneeze," or "Foxy Grandpa's Surprises," by "Bunny," (Carl F. Schultze.) All are full of illustrations in bright tions in bright colors. Another treat from the newspaper is "The House That Glue Built," made up of Clara Andrews Williams's series of "cut outs" of the rooms of a house, the furniture and the family, which are here reprinted from new plates on heavy paper and will furnish lots of amusement for rainy days before the little builders by the aid of papa's glue get their fine establishment ready for the family. George A. Williams has furnished fifteen pages in colors for this box of loose leaves for building purposes. But when we come to the provision for very little children choice is more and more diffi-cult. These books are all manufactured with every attraction that good ideas, skil-ful artists, fine color printing, gay, original covers and fabulously low price can give to them. Phyllis M. Gotch in "A Romance of a Boo-Bird Chick" and "Tuffy and the MerBoo" lets some new animals into the nursery; Helen Bannerman asks admission for "Pat and the Spider;" "Jolly Jumbo" is a heavy-weight, and it takes Harry B. Neilson, Clifton Bingham and W. Boyle to bring him to the children's room; N. and B. Parker don't want their "Baby Birds" frightened in the strange company already gathered, but Charles Robinson and Walter Copeland plead for their "Black Cat;" and Carlton Moore Park thinks even "The King of Beasts" might find a place in some daring baby's heart. And when all once more is quiet Kathleen Ainslee will tell of "Catherine Susan's Little Holiday;" and "Lady Tabitha and Us," or Mabel Mace will sing "Our Ups and Downs;" or the children will be told a little Japanese story in verse, and then will be taught that its name is "O Haru Ka." Perhaps not in the first Christmas day's excitement, but certainly very soon, the children will be content to turn with E. J. Thorley to other beautiful pages of color and learn "An Alphabet."

THOMPSON & THOMAS'S "Painting Pastimes," is a combination painting and drawing book, in which entertainment and instruction are cleverly invited. The book is so arranged that the figures to be drawn are on one side while the opposite page is blank for the young artist to copy the design. There is also a series of colored plates representing happy little children at play, animals, butterflies, fruits, flowers, etc., with the same picture given in outline on an opposite page to be painted. An excellent medium for teaching children the first steps in drawing and painting, the studies are graded, each one being a Edith little more difficult than the other. O'Donnell furnishes the drawings, and Gerard Chapman and others intersperse the designs with "taking" verses. Two works by Mrs. Phebe Westcott Humphreys, "Our Feathered Friends" and "Our Animal Friends in Their Native Homes," describe accurately the birds, animals and fishes for young people. "Toyland," printed in many colors, describes the wonderful toys that please the little ones so very much. Also on this list is "A B C Fun," a dainty juvenile illustrating in colors the story of a children's party, written in merry jingles.

Frederick Warne & Company as usual have an array of picture books, stories for wee tots and painting books, executed in charming designs, showing real artistic skill and much ingenuity. Harry B. Neilson's book of drawings, "Amazing Adventures," is an oblong volume, containing a series of full-page pictures reproduced in colors, illustrating the comical adventures of a sailor, a donkey and a Chinaman in Borneo. The text in prose and verse, by S. Baring Gould, amusingly describes the mishaps and escapes of this luckless trio, who encounter wild beasts and make more blunders than are really safe in Borneo. "Giddy-Go-Round" is another pretty picture book, the work of Madeline Hall, whose funny text and dainty illustrations make it quite unlike the usual children's book. Miss Hall has a special faculty for drawing ducks, and ducks we find here on every page, illustrating Timothy's adventures at a duck fair. Beatrix Potter's clever little books in the Peter Rabbit Series have given genuine pleasure during several recent years. This season she has ready "The Tale of Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle," Mrs. Tiggy-Winkle being a motherly old hedgehog who does the washing for the Peter Rabbit family and proves a most delightful hostess to a little girl who calls on her. Again there are the pretty pictures done in soft tints which have made Miss Potter's other books so attractive. "The Pie and the Patty-Pan" is also by Beatrix Potter, being the story of a little cat and a little dog, and containing ten fullpage pictures in color as well as outline draw-"Children's Books" is made up of "The Story of the Three Little Pigs," and "The History of Tom Thumb," retold in the good old style and pictured in many colored and black and white drawings. Either of these stories may also be had in separate form in "art" cartalso be had in separate form in art carridge paper wrappers. A pleasant feature of the year is the reissue of some of Walter Crane's inimitable nursery books, like "The Baby's Opera," "The Baby's Bouquet" and "The Baby's Own Æsop." These exquisite books are among the happy memories of the early days of many old-young people, so it is delightful to know they may now be procured for the new babies. It is also welcome news to hear that Kate Greenaway's seven picture books are again obtainable. Her bewitching little men and women in quaint costumes were a revelation to the children and parents of some twenty-five years ago. We must also note that Randolph Caldecott's artistic picture books, bound in four volumes, each containing four stories, or bound in two-volume form, are ready for weary Christmas shoppers. And we can always expect from this house a full line of new toy books, printed in fast colors on linen or stout paper, gaily illustrated and brightly written. Painting books of many varieties may also be had. For older children beyond the picture book age there is "Aunt Louisa's Book of Easy Poetry," containing many old favorites and a selection of new poems, classified under subjects, well illustrated and suitably bound, altogether a most useful and desirable volume.

A. Wessels Com-PANY's new edition in colors of Robert Browning's "Pied Piper of Hamelin," il-lustrated with fullpage pictures and text designs by Van Dyck, is from a literary and artistic standpoint a work of exceptional merit. Although avowedly gotten up for the little ones, it is one of the gift books of the season, every member of the family will delight to pore over. French, German, English and Dutch editions have been already arranged for, and others will probably be added to these. Rats and mice tumble over each other in this big quarto, from its opening pages; the pied piper in his parti-colored garments is weird enough, and the peo-ple of Hamelin, perfect studies of the Dutch of five hundred years ago, while the dear little chubby-faced children make one's heart ache as they go merrily and innocently skipping and jumping to their dreadful fate. Browning in this ballad has inmortalized an old legend of Brunswick, which will forever remain a part of English literature. Charles Welsh adds the fourth volume this season to his "Famous Battles of the Nineteenth Century." The period covered by it begins with 1875 and ends with 1900, comprising with the other volumes the famous encounters of a century. "The Dollar Juvenile Quartos" is a new series for popular favor, its initial number being "The Wonderful Wishes of Jacky and Jean," by Mary A. Dickerson. The story is really a modern version of Aladdin and his lamp, the magician being in this case a mysterious sparrow, who tells Jacky and Jean to rub his cage and wish for anything they desire and it will be promptly granted. C. B. Falls contributes six illustrations which are in colors, and a striking cover design. Under this series are also gathered new editions of Kingsey's "Water Babies," Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking Glass," in one volume, "The True Mother Goose," illustrated and edited by Blanche McManus, and "Monkey Shines," little tales for little children, by Bolton Hall.

W. A. WILDE COMPANY include a number of favorite authors among the makers of their seasonable books. Delightful home stories may be read within the covers of Mrs. C. V. Jamison's "Penhallow Family," Carolyn Rhoades' "That Preston Girl." The Nina The many previous tales of undoubted merit, to these ladies' credit, vouch for the attractive qualities of their newest books. "The Rainbow Bridge," a story by Frances Margaret Fox, follows the fortunes of little Marian Leefrom her entrance as a babe into the orphanage called the Home for Little Pilgrims, until good fortune restores to her her own father supposed to have died. "Hector, My Dog," by Egerton R. Young, is among the most desirable. It not only gives a glimpse of a dog's character and thoughts, being told by Hector himself, but carries the reader into the far Northland offering many pen pictures of life amidst its ice and snows and its busy, hardy inhabitants. Quite a number of volumes having for their motive our own early history are upon this firm's list. Everett T. Tomlinson's name on a title-page is an endorsement not only of its merit as a story, but of its general refinement of tone and reliability historically, making it safe for parents and librarians to recommend. "A Soldier of the Wilderness," his latest work, relates the fall of Fort Frontenac and the disaster under Abercrombie at Ticonderoga, There is a young hero, Peter Van de Bogert, wildly patriotic and seeking excitement in adventure. How the great Northwest territory was won and the Indians driven out by the hardy, courageous pioneers is por-trayed in "Camp Fires on the Sciote," by Charles S. Wood, the author of numerous other books of frontier life. This has a manly little hero who, orphaned by the cruelty of the Indians, takes his father's place in the settlement on the Ohio River, and by his own efforts supports his little sister. the time of the Mexican War is the scene of "A Frontier Knight," by Amy E. Blanchard, a new volume in the Pioneer Series. The story begins with the emigration of a young man and his two sisters to Texas, just after its annexation to the United States. The war with Mexico breaking out soon after their arrival gives splendid opportunity to the author to picture the conditions which went to make up the life in the border country at that time. "The Coming of the White Man" and "Ten Big Indians," two volumes of stories by Mary Hazelton Wade, have their suggestion in the beginnings of American history. "Ten Big Indians" is a companion volume to the "Ten Little Indians" which was issued last year, and proved exceedingly popular.

The John C. Winston Company have a New Deerfoot Series for the boys, a fact that will rejoice them immensely. Yielding to ever-increasing demands and entreaties for a continuance of the adventures of his famous character Deerfoot, the Shawanoe, Edward S. Ellis, the author, has written three more stories called the New Deerfoot Series in which Deerfoot is brought to life again. It may be recalled that he died at the conclusion of the old Deerfoot Series, but this is a succession of adventures that happened between the first and second volumes of the previous series, and omitted there where they chronologically belong. The volumes are called "Deerfoot in the Forest," "Deerfoot in the Prairies" and "Deerfoot in the Mountains," and even surpass in thrilling incident and exciting situation Mr. Ellis's former works on the same line. Deerfoot is a Christianized Indian, who goes to the rescue of two boys, George and Victor Sheldon, who have gone on a hunting expedition, not knowing of an Indian uprising. The fortunes of these three characters are followed through the three volumes. The books are illustrated in colors and half-tones by J. Steeple Davis.

STOKES' NEW HOLIDAY BOOKS

THE BASSES:

Fresh-Water and Marine.

By WILLIAM C. HARRIS, DR. TARLETON H. BEAN and Others.

Edited by LOUIS RHEAD, with numerous illustrations in colors and black and white, and a specially decorated cover by the editor.

A new book by the editor of "The Speckled Brook Trout," which was pronounced by the press and such well-known anglers and writers as Mr. Cleveland, Dr. van Dyke, and Dr. Weir Mitchell, the most beautiful angling book heretofore issued, and which received for its drawings and manufacture a gold medal at St. Louis,

With the experience gained, Mr. Rhead now follows this success with a still more admirable volume. From an artistic standpoint, from cover to back the book is notable, containing as it does about fifty original pictures,—several being in colors,—and having a remarkable cover representing the skin of a Striped Bass, painted from a living specimen and reproduced in the natural irridescent hues. There are also several photo-engravings of the fish in repose, as well as reproductions of drawings showing the modes of capture and the fish in action.

of capture and the fish in action.

The contribution on Salt-water Basses is written by Tarleton H. Bean, a world-famous scientific writer, the founder of the New York Aquarium, for many years a fish-culturist, United States Commissioner at many World's Fairs, and author of many books. Dr. Bean, in this volume, gives really the first adequate treatise ever written on the Striped Bass, its habits, habitat, and modes of capture. Little has previously been written on this coming, rightly named, game fish, and Dr. Bean writes fully and with authority on this and the other marine basses.

The late William C. Harris was without a peer as a practical angler, and, after fifty years of continuous writing, he took up for this volume, the Freshwater Basses.

Mr. Rhead contributes three short articles; one on The Choice of Flies, one on Basses in the Beaverkill, and another on Cooking Bass, with a few simple recipes.

Mr. James A. Cruikshauk, the well-known writer on angling, contributes a practical article on Artificial Lures, based on his expert knowledge of the subject and illustrated by reproductions of many of the most taking lures.

WOMEN PAINTERS OF THE WORLD.

from the time of Caterina Vigri (1413-1463) to Rosa Bonheur and the present day. Edited by WALTER SHAW SPARROW, with 6 photogravures, seven color plates, and more than 200 half-tone illustrations.

Any woman may well be proud of the record shown by this sumptuous book, extending as it does over a period of about 400 years and including hundreds of names that will go down to posterity with those of the most famous of their craft.

The pictures have been reproduced with the greatest care, and while they include many famous paintings that are familiar, the greater part has been chosen from inaccessible sources or rare private collections, and are unfamiliar or unknown even to collectors.

In preparing the text, which is sympathetic and exhaustive, the editor has been assisted by many well-known art critics, both in England and on the Continent. This aims to show the growth of woman's influence on art and the This aims to show the part that she has played in it.

THE CHILDHOOD OF JESUS CHRIST.

By HENRY VAN DYKE.

In this dainty gift-book Dr. van Dyke tells in his inimitable way of the influence of the idea of the Christ-Child upon medieval and modern art. He calls attention to many great and familiar pictures and others as well, and dwells sympathetically on the poetry and beauty of the divine motherhood and the wonderful gifts of imagination that have been inspired by it.

The book contains many beautiful reproductions of the pictures told about in the text.

Cloth, 16mo, with numerous illustrations from famous paintings, $1.00. See the Masterpiece Series, in which also this volume is published.

OLD PEWTER, Brass, Copper and Sheffield Plate.

By N. HUDSON MOORE. Author of "The Lace Book," "The Old China Book," etc.

Old pewter is becoming daily of greater interest to the householder. Old plates, platters and chargers, hollow ware—jugs, mugs, tankards and the like-are greatly in demand for the dining-room.

This book is a satisfactory guide to the purchase and identification of these treasures. All the known marks of the makers are given, the details of manufacture, the style of decoration, and the correct weight. More than one hundred pieces of old ware are illustrated, most of them from rare collections and here reproduced for the first time.

The household articles in copper and brass are treated and illustrated in the same manner, together with the fancy for the antique Russian articles in these metals.

Sheffield plate and other old plated ware are also considered, with a catalogue of the best known makers and many fine illustrations.

With 105 illustrations, cloth, 8vo, $2.00, net; postpaid, $2.18.

CHATS ON OLD FURNITURE. A Practical Guide for Collectors. By ARTHUR HAYDEN. Author of "Chats on English China," etc.

This volume enables collectors and those who are interested in old furniture to discriminate between the styles of furniture and to distinguish the features of different periods.

The Elizabethan period and the influence of the Renaissance on domestic furniture are first taken up, and Jacobean, late seventeenth-century, William and Mary, and Queen Anne Styles, are then fully dealt with. The furniture of Chippendale, of Hepplewhite and of Sheraton receives detailed treatment. In addition, separate chapters are given showing the contemporaneous influence of Italian, Dutch and French furniture upon English makers.

With 100 illustrations, large 12mo, cloth, $2.00, net; postpaid, $2.18.

HOME FURNISHING: Practical and Artistic.

By ALICE M. KELLOGG.

The success of this volume is its tried and thorough practicability. In it the author attempts to give from actual experience just that advice most needed to make the home in the first place comfortable, and secondly, artistic.

The first part of the book is devoted to suggestions and ideas for the halls, the various rooms of the house, and the veranda. A more minute, comprehensive consideration of the decorations and furnishings, essential and accessory, follows in Part II, in chapters on Furniture New and Old, Floor Coverings, Wall Hangings, Windows and Doorways, Book Shelves, Plate Rails, Mantels, Bric-a-brac, etc.

With 55 illustrations from photographs, cloth, 12mo, $1.50, net; postpaid, $1.65.

SERVING AND WAITING. By ELEANOR MARCHANT.

This book, prepared by a well-known writer on domestic topics, is intended particularly to meet the needs of the modest home where only one servant is kept, or possibly none at all. The book covers a wide range of usefulness. Practically every form of table entertainment is considered in its pages, with much attention to the details of linen, china, silver, lighting, and floral decorations; and chapters are devoted to informal functions and unique festivities.

It is not a cook book, and yet it contains many invaluable suggestions in cookery. It is not a book of etiquette, and yet the correct forms of service are fully defined. It is not a book of entertainment solely, but it answers very satisfactorily the problem: How to be a successful hostess. And, most importantly, it is a sure guide to making home and the home table attractive to one's own family. Besides these specific points of value, in its dozen chapters, there is much housewifely information of a miscellaneous character.

With 32 full-page illustrations from photographs, cloth, 12mo, $1.20, net; postpaid, $1.35.

MY FRIENDS AND THEIR CIFTS.

A record for those who give and receive. By MABEL L. BARBOUR.

For several years the need has been felt for a convenient book of record wherein could be found such information regarding one's friends as the dates of their birthdays and marriage anniversaries, their preferences as to colors, flowers, jewels, etc., the sizes of gloves and other apparel worn by them, and similar data of value when gifts are to be selected. This volume meets this need.

12mo, ornamental, boxed, $1.00; red morocco, full gilt, boxed, $2.50.

THUMB-O-CRAPHS.

The latest volume in the Record Series.

The latest volume in the Record Series.

The autograph hunter and the little maid with her birthday book are no longer satisfied with the mere names of their friends and of the world's celebrities. They must now have a "thumb-print" as well, and this latest fad, of combined science and amusement, promises to rival stamp-collecting in its popularity. The hobby has its growth in the great discovery that the lines on no two thumbs are ever alike, and that nobody's thumb ever changes the design of its whorls and lines.

"Thumb-o-graphs" provides a neat little album, with pages for recording "thumb-prints" and autographs, to which is attached a specially inked pad that only needs moistening to be ready for use.

KRAUSZ'S PRACTICAL AUTO-MOBILE DICTIONARY.

(English—French—German; French—English—German; German—French—English.)

By SIGMUND KRAUSZ.

Containing more than 12,000 technical terms and other words employed in connection with motor cars and motoring.

The remarkable development of the motor car industry, The remarkable development of the motor car industry, especially in America, England, France and Germany, the prevailing export and import conditions of the market, with the consequent migration of foreign chauffeurs and mechanics, as well as to the ever increasing international sport events, the growing habits of motorists to make pleasure tours in foreign lands, and—last but not least—the impossibility of finding proper translations of technical motoring terms, in existing reference works, have caused an urgent demand for a special and practical automobile dictionary in the English, French and German languages. The work is invaluable for the engineering, correspondence, sales and other departments of motor car factories, individual mechanics ambitious to increase their technical knowledge, sportsmen, motoring tourists and all

This series is of inestimable value to all who wish to have at hand a convenient and complete collection of the works of the favorite masters.

Each 16mo, parchment, illustrated in duotone, 25 cents, net; postpaid, 30 cents.

THE SIECE OF THE SOUTH POLE.

By H. R. MILL.

Dr. Mill has collected in this volume, in consecutive form, a vast amount of material-in fact everything from the speculations of the ancients in regard to the Great Southern Ocean to the twentieth-century explorations of Nordenskjold, Bruce, and Scott. It is a narrative of courage, sacrifice, and adventure that has not been matched.

The real story opens with the voyages of Capt. James Cook and the valuable data collected by the American whalers. Then follow chapters on the work of Bellingshausen, Weddell, the Enderbys, and others, leading up to Durville, for the French; Lieut. Charles Wilkes. of the United States Exploring Expedition, and James Clark Ross, of Erebus and Terror fame. The revival of interest through Sir John Murray's work in H. M. S. Challenger, the voyages of Gerlache, Borchgrevink and Drygalski, and as has been mentioned of Nordenskjold, Bruce and Scott, bring the narrative down to latest possible date.

With many engravings, maps and other illustrations, and an elaborate map in colors by Bartholomew, 8vo, cloth, $1.60, net; postpaid, $1.75.

THE SAINT LAWRENCE: Its Basin and Border Lands.

The story of their discovery, exploration and occupation.

By SAMUEL EDWARD DAWSON,

Litt.D., F.R.S.C., Author of "The Voyages of the Cabots," "Canada and Newfoundland," etc.

A remarkably thorough, consecutive account of the geographical exploration and settlement of the St. Lawrence basin, including the Great Lakes and the upper Mississippi.

With illustrations from drawings, photographs and maps, and with map in colors by J. G. Bartholomew, cloth, small 8vo, $1.60, net; postpaid, $1.75.

THE MEMORIES OF ROSE EYTINGE.

Rose Eytinge was in the hey-dey of her popularity during the Civil War period and later-the Golden Age of the American drama. She was the associate and personal friend of Edwin Booth, J. W. and Lester Wallack, E. L. Daven-port, and Augustin Daly, and knew and played with nearly all the greater-and lesser-lights of that interesting period.

Into this little book she has gathered a wealth of anecdote of people and things and throws many new lights upon relationships little understood before.

The book is of interest not only to the dramatic profession and to students of American drama, but as well to the general reader

Cloth, 12mo, 80 cents, net; postpaid, 90 cents. Illustrated edition, $1.20, net; postpaid, $1.30.

THE JOY OF LIFE. By LILLIE HAMILTON FRENCH.

As Pastor Wagner is the apostle of simplicity, so does Miss French plead for a little "joyful-ness." In this book is a charming philosophy, illustrated with frequent pointed incidents, which will find many a responsive chord, and soothe many an hour at the close of a fretful day. Our worries, our misunderstandings, the annoyances that we cause others and that others cause us, our deep griefs, and our blessings—these are put before us in a way that cannot fail to clear away the dust of daily life from our minds and hearts and leave us more courageous.

Miss French is never didactic, never obtrusive, never choking us with a moral, but always gracious, enlivening, and natural. One can liken the reading of the book to a conversation with a delightful friend.

Cloth, 16mo, 80 cents, net; postpaid, 90 cents.

CHILDHOOD.

By MRS. THEODORE W. BIRNEY. With an Introduction by G. STANLEY HALL.

The author of this book, the founder of the National Congress of Mothers, has an authority based on wide and thoughtful experience.

Her dominant impulse is to bring parents and children into closer and more sympathetic relations. She believes that discord in the home is in most cases due to a lack of comprehension of child nature and its needs on the part of those who have the care of the child. There is abundant parental, self-sacrificing love, but that it must be supplemented by real knowledge of the child's mental, moral and physical nature.

Through simple, practical illustrations of every-day occurrences the author makes clear to parents the importance of being able to grasp the boy's or the girl's point of view, for only by so doing can they hope to gain the confidence of children and to guide them wisely.

The illustrative cases are such as can be applied with great advantage to the trying conditions existing in many households.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.00, net; postpaid, $1.10.

IDEALS FOR CIRLS.

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED. (PRISCILLA WAKEFIELD)

This work possesses the charm of an excellent literary style, combined in a high degree with the impress of a noble and gracious per-sonality. The subjects are well chosen at hold a wide range of interest, which with the qualities of helpfulness, high integrity and sweet womanliness that they inculcate must make the book of value in the development and strengthening of character,

The work has brought to Mrs. Learned hundreds of letters of warm appreciation from readers in all quarters of this continent.

THE FERN ALLIES OF NORTH AMERICA: North of Mexico.

By WILLARD NELSON CLUTE.

Author of "Our Ferns in Their Haunts." etc.

Mr. Clute's "Our Ferns in Their Haunts," remains the standard work on the ferns of North America. In the preparation of this sequel, dealing with the allied forms of plant life not included in the fern families, the same careful attention to detail has been given that characterized the earlier book.

It is a complete guide to all the native species found east of the Rocky Mountains and north of the Gulf States, described from natural specimens, and covering a greater range and including more species than any other similar work. Every common, or English, and scientific name is given. Special attention is paid to haunts and habits, uses, folk-lore, structure, growth, abundance, distribution and varieties.

With 8 colored plates and nearly 200 line and half-tone illustrations and diagrams, by IDA MARTIN CLUTE. Large 12mo, cloth, $2.00, net; postpaid, $2.67.

New Fiction.

THE HEART OF LADY ANNE.

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE.

Authors of "Rose of the World," etc.

Here is what "might be called 'A Tale in Porcelain' of the taming of a shrew. Shrew, no doubt, is too harsh a name for so dainty a piece as my young lady Anne. Taming, again, is perhaps an over-weighty word to paint the conflict of hearts and wit—full of anxiety at times, but always of courtesy."

"In the eyes of some-of these at least, who follows:

"In the eyes of some—of those, at least, who followed with any interest the career of 'Incomparable Bellairs' through the Bath Comedy—the lady Anne of the present tale may derive a special luster from her friendship with Kitty," who "still guides the plot and leads the cantrips." With four superb illustrations in colors, by Ethel Franklin Betts, and with decorative title page, head pieces, initials, etc., in two colors, by Frederick G. Hall. A splendid gift book for the holidays.

Cloth, 12mo, $1.50; white cloth, gilt, $2.50.

A SERVANT OF THE PUBLIC. By ANTHONY HOPE.

Who Ora Pinsent was, what she was and why she was who and what she was; how she appeared to her friends and to the world outside her profession, and how that profession determined her life and actions. An intimate and unbiased story of the private life and personal feelings of a popular public character. While about an actress, this story is not about the stage, and holds nothing in common with the conventional novel of the theater.

"Imagine much that is best in Meredith or James, and all that is best in Anthony Hope, and you have a fair idea of 'A Servant of the Public."—New York Globe.

Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

THE BLACK SPANIEL. By ROBERT HICHENS.

Author of "The Garden of Allah," "Felix," etc.

"The Black Spaniel," the long story that with several shorter ones make up this volume, is as unusual and original as the novels Mr. Hichens has given us previously. Aside from its compelling appeal against vivisection, the story has as its theme a most curious and realistic psychological motive, growing out of the cruel treatment of a little dog, that baffles the reader and, even against his will, holds his attention to the last page.

The remaining stories are chiefly of the Arabian desert—the fascinating background and absorbing presence of "The Garden of Allah."

Illustrated, cloth, $1.50.

THE SPECULATIONS OF JOHN STEELE.

By ROBERT BARR.

Author of "Tekla," "The Victors," etc.

A lively story of business adventure, of mystery and of exciting contest, with a love episode amazing in its originality and cleverness. The struggle of the hero with the greatest monetary power in the world is particularly vivid and interesting.

Illustrated by F. R. Gruger. Cloth, $1.50.

AMERICAN WIVES AND OTHERS.

By JEROME K. JEROME.

Author of "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," "Three Men in a Boat," etc.

This is Mr. Jerome's latest book, published last autumn, and it has an added interest at this time on account of the extended lyceum tour of the author through the United States during the autumn and winter of 1905-6.

This is Mr. Jerome's first platform appearance in America, and much interest is manifested in his visit. "American Wives and Others," which furnishes several of the readings, contains his best work in this vein since "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," and is full of the same genial humor and good-natured raillery.

With illustrations by George McManus, cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

New Books for Children.

SIR TOADY CRUSOE.

By S. R. CROCKETT.

Profusely illustrated by Gordon Browne.

This book is the first book for children that Mr. Crockett has published in several years, and all who are familiar with his delightful "Sweetheart Travelers" and "Sir Toady Lion" will heartily welcome the new work. With all the experience of an unusual childhood to draw upon, with a boundless sympathy for the ideals and interests of children, and with a charm of style not surpassed by any modern writer, this new book should be one of the most popular as well as one of the most worthy of the present season.

Large, 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

All the engravings are full-page, and have been produced with great care. While chosen chiefly from the masters of different countries and different periods, and including some old favorites, the pictures are in no sense hackneyed and are for the most part new even to art lovers.

Each illustrated in colors, tall 16mo, boards, with colored picture covers, each 50 cents.

This series is planned really to fit into the stocking; the books are bound in bright colors, are profusely illustrated with brightly colored pictures, and are otherwise designed particularly to delight and interest the child.

THE DENIM ELEPHANT. By EMILY CARTER WIGHT.

This true little picture of child-life, dealing intimately with the plays and objects dearest to the child's heart, has all the directness and sympathy that have given Helen Bannerman's "Little Black Sambo" such wonderful success. Although by a new artist the pictures are of special beauty and interest, portraying a distinct type of child-life with charm and delicacy of manner.

THE HOUSE THAT CLUE BUILT.

By CLARA ANDREWS WILLIAMS.

Illustrated in colors by George A. Williams.

The series provides the rooms of the house —parlor, dining-room, kitchen, etc., with all their furniture. The latter the child can cut out and paste upon the pictures of the rooms according to the suggestions given in the text, or may follow out his own ideas, thus making an attractive and permanent toy. There are fifteen plates: seven of rooms, tov. seven of furniture, and one containing the family.

ing the rooms, discussing the best and most advantageous places for placing the furniture, which gives the "book house" an educational value beyond a mere plaything, while the objects are so simple in detail that a young child can cut them out.

Oblong 4to, boards, with covers in colors, $1.00, loose leaves, boxed, $1.00.

TICE: HIS STORY. By R. F. OUTCAULT.

In this new book, as in "Buster Brown Abroad," Mr. Outcault departs from his usual manner of having his pictures tell the story and writes a captivating, humorous, and unique dog-story.

Tige, Buster's faithful companion, tells in an inimitable way the events of his life, from his puppy-hood to the time he met Buster, and their adventures afterward.

Mr. Outcault supplies many characteristic illustrations in black and white, and in the story it has been his aim to do in a humorous way for unfortunate dogdom what "Black Beauty" seriously did for the better treatment of animals in general—to show to children the rights of animals, and to teach them to treat their dumb friends kindly.

A handsome portrait of Tige in the roll of "autobiographer" adorns the Cloth 4to, decorated cover, $1.25.

CON THE WIZARD.

By JOHN H. JEWETT.

Author of "Bunny Stories," "More Bunny Stories," etc. With 8 illustrations in color by Edward R. Little and many illustrations in the text by Oliver Herford.

Mr. Jewett's name upon a child's book is sufficient as-Mr. Jewett's name upon a child's book is sufficient assurance of its cleverness and its merit. Few books in recent years have equalled in popularity his famous "Bunny Stories," which first appeared in St. Nicholas, and sell in large numbers with each recurring hoiday season. It is needless to say that Con is a very interesting wizard; and that this little book will equal in popularity, aside from its unique form and bright illustrations, any other small book for children of the Christmas season.

BUSTER BROWN'S PRANKS. By R. F. OUTCAULT.

The children's interest in Buster Brown never dies, and his annual appearance in book form is eagerly awaited in thousands of nurseries the world over.

"Buster Brown's Pranks" continues the familiar series of brightly colored pictures, printed from new plates on fine paper. Buster is up to new mischief on every page, and is as fertile in good resolutions as in former years. Tige is still his faithful companion and willing confederate.

Mr. Outcault's pictures delight the boys and girls alike, the older children as well as the younger, and the "Buster Brown Books" have been the most popular children's books of recent seasons.

Oblong, 4to, boards in colors, 70 cents.

FOXY CRANDPA'S SURPRISES.

By "BUNNY" (Carl F. Schultz).

With the children Foxy Grandpa ranks equal in interest with Buster Brown. The goodnatured old gentleman and his mischievous grandchildren, who so dearly delight in practical jokes, and known to nearly every child in the land.

"Foxy Grandpa's Surprises" is a companion volume to "Foxy Grandpa Up-to-Date" and "The Adventures of Foxy Grandpa," continuing the series of brightly colored pictures, printed from new plates on fine paper. It contains many new adventures for Grandpa, who usually, though not always, turns the joke in an unexpected way upon the Boys.

Oblong, 4to, boards in colors, 70 cents.

LITTLE SAMMY SNEEZE. By WINSOR McCAY.

Sammy Sneeze is a new "comic" character that is rapidly making friends with the children through his appearance each week in the colored Sunday supplement of the New York Herald.

Sammy is a good boy, excepting for his terrible propensity to sneeze at the wrong time and place. This causes him untold trouble wherever he goes, and results in many comical situations, which Winsor McCay has humorously depicted in bright colors. The book is printed from new plates in the same size and style as the colored "Buster Brown" and "Foxy Grandpa" books, the pictures telling the story.

Oblong, 4to, boards in colors, 70 cents.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS

NEW BOOKS OF IMPORTANCE

With Walt Whitman in Camden

A Diary Record of Conversations kept by HOR-ACE TRAUBEL, with many important letters, documents, portraits, etc. The publication of this volume is certainly one of the most important events in the literary history of America. For several years the author, one of Whitman's literary executors, recorded faithfully the conversations and events of his almost daily meetings with the poet. The result is a picture of the daily life and thought of Walt Whitman such as we possess of no other great author, possibly excepting Dr. Johnson. Of the many letters and manuscripts very few have ever been published, and they are from many of the greatest of Whitman's contemporaries. The discussion which accompanied them gives Whitman's estimates and opinions of a vast number of men and events in the most delightful manner. Sumptuously illustrated, handsomely bound. Net, $3.00; by post, $3.25.

The Life of John Fiske

By THOMAS SERGEANT PERRY. Volume 27 of the Beacon Biographics. This series once more offers the first published life of an eminently great American, written by one who enjoyed the most intimate personal acquaintance with Mr. Fiske. Pocket size, cloth, photogravure portrait; net, 75 cents; by post, 80 cents.

Paris and the Social Revolution

By ALVAN FRANCIS SANBORN, A study of the Revolutionary Element in the Various Classes of Parisian Life. With 72 illustrations by Vaughan Trowbridge. The New York Mail says of this book: "It is a refreshing thing to read a book written by a man who knows his subject through and through. We do not believe the social student will find a dull page in the book. It presents the very spirit and essence of poetry, music and art of the French Revolutionary movement; the whole quivering world of modern radical Paris is here." Its value is immediate and international. The principles of human nature disclosed are universal, and its interpretations are full of suggestion to those who would understand the trend of radical thought in our own country. Sumptuously printed and illustrated, 8vo, cloth, net, $3.50; by post, $3.75. net, $3.50; by post, $3.75.

The Aftermath of Slavery

NEW FICTION

Gumption

By NATHANIEL C. FOWLER, Jr. A tale of Yankee push and progress, with vivid pictures of modern newspaper life. The author describes conditions and people in an inimitable style, full of humor and keen satire, and with all its free-dom and ease of style, the story has a serious undercurrent which shows the value of good old Yankee "gumption" in the making of success. It has many of the essential qualities of sound sense which made "The Selfmade Merchant" so great a seller. With illustrations by Charles Copeland. 12mo, cloth, decorative, $1.50.

Where Copper Was King

By JAMES NORTH WRIGHT. A remarkably interesting story, full of adventurous incident and with a delicate vein of romance, which records vividly a fast disappearing phase of Western life. The author was formerly Superintendent of the Calumet and Hecla Mine, and he describes herein life that he has actually seen, and of which he himself has been a part. 12mo, cloth, decorative, $1.50.
